Deputies Vote Blum Power To Halt Flow Of Volunteers

Chamber Unanimously Heeds Premier's Plea to 'Save Europe.'

Senate Approval Seen Next Week

Suggested Bid to Join Anti-Communist Bloc Called 'Trap.'

The European Situation.

The French Chamber of Deputies voted unanimously to give Premier Leon Blum power to halt the flow of volunteers from that country to Spain.

Italy and Germany were ready to throw fresh troops into Spain unless Soviet Russia abandoned her "plot" to communize that country, diplomats understood. Page 5.

Deputies Back Blum.

By the Associated Press.

Paris, Jan. 15.—The Chamber of Deputies voted unanimously tonight—391 to 0—to give Premier Leon Blum power to halt the flow of volunteers from or through France to the Spanish civil war.

Heeding the premier's warning that the volunteer question had become one of "saving Europe from war," the Deputies responded overwhelmingly to his appeal to show France's "will for peace, good will and respect for international agreements."

The vote was on the government's bill to punish French volunteers at the discretion of judges and to impose fines of 10,000 francs ($460) and prison sentences of six months or a year on persons involved in the enlistment of volunteers.

Time Limit Set.

The bill fixed a time limit of six months, as it was hoped the Spanish conflict would be over within that time. Premier Blum promised its powers would not be invoked unless other nations took like action.

The premier was expected to obtain the Senate's approval of the measure early next week, to be ready for immediate and effective action as soon as other powers agree on measures for controlling the volunteer tide. Little opposition was expected in the upper house.

Before the vote Blum told the chamber he needed the powers embodied in the bill as the only way to get "reciprocity" from Germany. Armed with such authority, he would press demands that Germany and other interested nations impose similar bans.

The Socialist premier said France was willing to accept any kind of control on movement of men and arms into Spain approved by the international non-intervention committee on any part of French territory "without raising the question of our sovereignty."

Lafayette Action Cited.

During the debate the example of the Marquis de Lafayette in the American Revolution was cited by a deputy to justify earlier enrollment of French volunteers with the Spanish Socialist forces to fight for an ideal. The premier dealt with this point:

"Both the Valencia (Socialist) and Burgos (Fascist) governments in Spain have made use of foreign volunteers. In the past that was possible—for Lafayette and for others. But now it is a question of saving Europe from war."

Men already in Spain would not be affected by the bill, nor would it prohibit propaganda in favor of either Spanish faction.

Anti-Red Pact Decried.

The British government already has invoked a law of 1870 to prevent its subjects from joining the Spanish armies.

Suggestions from Rome that Italy and Germany planned to invite Britain and possibly France to join an anti-Communist bloc—as the price of their neutrality in Spain—were received unfavorably in Paris.

Officials declined comment, but authoritative commentators referred to the suggestion as "a trap, a transparent maneuver" to compel France to help isolate the Soviet Union, with which she is in alliance.

Elaine Barrymore Sues for Divorce

Los Angeles, Jan. 15 (AP).—Elaine Jacobs Barrymore filed suit for divorce in superior court here late today against John Barrymore, actor. She charged mental cruelty.

Mrs. Barrymore, known on the stage as Elaine Barrie, asked temporary support, but at her Beverly Hills home said she did not intend asking permanent alimony.

The divorce action followed by little more than two months their marriage at Yuma, Ariz. They separated New Year's Eve when Barrymore walked out after a disagreement over her plans to appear in a stage play.

Elaine, in her complaint, accused Barrymore of striking her at a New Year's Eve party, and of threatening to "kill or seriously maim" her. She alleged that the actor called her "vile, violent, obscene, indecent, profane and opprobrious" names.

Barrymore had no comment to make.

Ownerless Horse Keeps on Eating—At 3 Bucks a Day

Cypress D. Beau.

Cypress D. Beau, 8-year-old bay gelding, for whom Mrs. John Hay Whitney refused to be "consignee," yesterday was ordered sold at auction by Justice F. D. Letts to satisfy the claim of the Railway Express Agency for $150, representing the upkeep of the horse since he arrived here from Toronto, November 25.

At the express company his oats cost $3 a day. Yesterday the company, through the law firm of Minor, Gatley & Drury, got permission to sell Cypress in the stables of Dr. J. C. Robinson, 222 C street northwest, Monday afternoon at 2 o'clock.

The horse was shipped by L. L. Briden, the suit showed, to Mrs. Whitney. Since then there have been numerous interchanges of letters and telegrams in an effort to determine what should be done with Cypress, all to no avail.

Eddie Foster, Diamond Star, Is Auto Victim

Famous 'Hit-Run' Third Baseman Dies After Hit-Run Accident.

Eddie Foster died last night.

The little, bow-legged fellow who played third base for the Washington baseball team from 1912 to 1919, and who was a master of the "hit and run" play, died of injuries suffered in a "hit and run" accident.

When Foster was holding down third base for the Nationals, the term of hit-and-run was only a baseball term. In those days, Walter Johnson, the "Big Train," was in his prime.

Turned to Religion.

The diminutive Foster, who retired from baseball in 1922, turned devoutly to religion after his playing days, even as did Evangelist Billy Sunday, also a former major-leaguer.

In the Cherrydale, Va., community where he lived with his family, the rugged little former infielder was a leader in church affairs and profound student of the Bible. For several years he had been the teacher of a bible class.

Surviving Foster besides his mother and his wife are two daughters, Betty, 16, and Anne, 12, and a son, Frank, 14.

Foster, injured in a mysterious automobile accident on January 7, died at Casualty Hospital. At his bedside was his mother, Mrs. Callie Foster, 72, who speeded here from Chicago after receiving word that her son's condition had taken a turn for the worse.

Found lying on the side of the

Patterson Denies Report of Ousting

Havana, Jan. 15 (AP).—Guillermo Patterson y Jauregui, Cuban ambassador to Washington, in Havana to consult with President Federico Laredo Bru and the state department, said tonight he had been confirmed in his post by the new president and would return to Washington Sunday.

He asserted reports he would be recalled and replaced by Pedro Martinez Fraga, minister to London, were without basis.

New Suspect Is Questioned In Kidnaping

Federal Agents Know Boy's Slayer, Theory Indicates.

By the United Press.

Everett, Wash., Jan. 15.—Chief William H. Cole, of the Washington State police, tonight questioned one suspect whose identity was not revealed and sought another in the hunt for the kidnap-slayer of Charles Mattson.

The suspect questioned was said to be the son of a prominent Everett physician. He lives alone in an isolated cabin in the region where the body of the boy was found, five miles south of Everett. He was known to have dissected animals frequently.

State police made an intensive search of the Pigeon Creek district west of Everett for another suspect whose identity they would not reveal. The man was known to answer the discription of the adbuctor and to have a grudge against the "upper class."

Convict Questioned.

By the Associated Press.

Tacoma, Wash., Jan. 15.—Relentless in their search for the kidnap-slayer of little Charles Mattson, officers held a much-sought former convict and a former mental patient tonight as the Mattson family prepared to vacate its Tacoma home for a rest in "some secluded spot."

It was understood Dr. W. W. Mattson, father of the victim, would leave Tacoma with his wife and two remaining children after a press conference tomorrow.

The conference was announced as designed to give Dr. Mattson an opportunity to clear up some of the mystery still veiling the 15 days of suspense between the abduction and the finding of Charles' beaten and frozen body last Monday.

Some sources recalled that the children, William, 16, and Muriel, 14, who witnessed the kidnaping, evidently had not been summoned to look through the police rogue's gallery for possible likenesses of the brutal abductor. One informant said this might be taken to mean the Federal agents knew who the abductor was.

The projected departure of the Mattsons suggested their presence here no longer was required by officers.

The hunted ex-convict, Fred Orrin Haynes, 48, walked into the Seattle Police Station this morning, sat for 15 minutes without being recognized and then announced:

"They've got me all wrapped around this kidnaping. I didn't have anything to do with it."

Although Haynes was booked on signed orders of Federal Agent A. E Deere and Seattle Detective V. E. Webb, and questioned for more than an hour, Detective Capt. Marshall Scrafford said he had "no apparent connection" with the Mattson case.

Cottage Searched.

Haynes, a former inmate of Folsom Prison, Calif., had been sought since Wednesday. A San Jose, Calif., woman reported renting a cottage near Seattle to a man answering his description and a woman companion. Federal agents and State police searched the furnished cottage yesterday, but reported no discoveries of importance.

Arthur Madsen, 26, who admitted once being an inmate of a hospital for the insane in Washington State, was held at Sacramento, Calif., for investigation. Police Capt. Fritz Kaminsky declined to say whether he or Federal agents instigated the "hold" order against the man.

Madsen, who was arrested after a bank official reported he acted strangely, admitted, Kaminsky said, that he knew Dr. Mattson, father of the slain boy, and that a member of his family once had been treated by the physician. Dr. Mattson said, however, he did not recall the man.

Grudge Slaying Hinted.

One theory widely held during Charles' kidnaping and the search for his slayer is that the crime was the work of a demented former patient who possibly was actuated by a fancied grudge against the physician rather than hope of profit.

Madsen, according to Kaminsky, had papers showing he left a PWA camp at Tillamook, Oreg., January 2, and denied knowing anything about the kidnaping.

"Madsen might be entirely innocent," Kaminsky said, "but I place him as a definite suspect."

At Bellingham, Lee Haskell Fowler sulked in a solitary cell and refused to tell officers of his activities between December 27, when Charles was kidnaped, and January 9. Fowler has been in jail since January 9, having confessed the $900 robbery of a milling company.

Van Devanter Still May Face Hearing on Duck Law Violation

'Ignorance Is No Excuse for Neglecting U. S. Stamp,' Is Claim.

The case of Willis Van Devanter, 77-year-old member of the Supreme Court of the United States, who is alleged to have gone hunting without the required $1 Federal revenue stamp attached to his hunter's license, has not been closed.

It is entirely possible, The Post learned last night, that Van Devanter may be prosecuted in a Federal court.

Sportsmen have been bombarding the Department of Agriculture with demands that Van Devanter be penalized. Ignorance of the law, these protestants point out, is no excuse. And a man's prominence, they add, is no reason why he should be let off.

Officials of the Department of Agriculture said yesterday that Van Devanter's case is definitely not closed. It is known that they have held informal conversations with officials of the Department of Justice.

The procedure in such a case is as follows: The game warden files a report on the alleged law violation. The report goes to the office of the solicitor of the Department of Agriculture. This office then forwards it to the Department of Justice, which decides whether there is sufficient evidence to prosecute. The report of the game warden in the Van Devanter case is now in the office of the solicitor of the Department of Agriculture.

$60,000,000 for Expansion Is Announced by U. S. Steel; Clash Imperils Motor Parleys

By the United Press.

Pittsburgh, Jan. 15.—The United States Steel Corporation tonight announced a $60,000,000 expansion program as Myron C. Taylor, its board chairman, appealed for closer co-operation betweeen labor and capital in an effort to end economic discord.

William A. Irvin, president of U. S. Steel, announced the modernization program at a dinner climaxing the celebration of the opening of a new Homestead plate mill which brought 600 persons, including big steel executives and newspapermen, to Pittsburgh.

"I deplore the occasion of any controversy among men of similar intentions in their joint work of management and production and their relations to the public," Taylor said in addressing the dinner gathering.

"I have faith that if patience is invoked, if all prejudice and ill feeling are discarded, if honest intention to co-operate predominates, if self-interest is subordinated to the common good, we can and must through common effort not only accomplish that equitable relationship between the owner, the worker and the public which will solve our existing economic discord, but help to render less acute that condition which is not new but which was

Order to Disband 1,000 National Guardsmen Halted by Tilt.

By the United Press.

Detroit, Jan. 15.—Orders to demobilize half the 2,000 National Guardsmen in Flint were countermanded suddenly tonight as the precarious truce between the United Automobile Workers and General Motors was shaken by union leaders' belligerent assertions.

An exchange of statements between John L. Lewis, chief of the Committee for Industrial Organization, and William D. Knudsen, executive vice president of General Motors, left no doubt that the first major problem of collective bargaining conferences starting Monday will be the union's demand that it be "exclusive" bargaining agent.

Tonight Adolph Germer, a Lewis lieutenant, urged 500 Flint workers to continue strikes against General Motors to "force a final settlement favorable to us."

Adjt. Gen. John S. Bersey said at Lansing that the 126th Infantry's marching orders had been canceled because sanitary quarters had been found for them. The 126th had been in an abandoned school house.

An authoritative source told the United Press, however, that the decision also was influenced by:

The union's decision to picket G. M. plants after evacuation by "sit-

Held in Sianfu, 27 Americans' Fate Unknown

Embassy Counselor Peck on Way to Aid Them; Was Feared Lost.

By the United Press.

Shanghai (Saturday), Jan. 16.—The fate of 27 Americans reportedly detained as hostages in Sianfu, by Shensi Province Communist rebels, remained in doubt today.

United States Embassy attaches in Nanking had no word from Willys R. Peck, embassy counselor, who flew to Sian yesterday to attempt to arrange the Americans' release.

Some fear was felt that Peck, too, may have been detained. It was pointed out that the men who kidnaped Generalissimo Chiang Kai-shek, Nanking dictator, at Sian last month still are in control there and would not hesitate to seize anybody who might be useful in guaranteeing them against attack by government bombing planes.

The United Press reported last night that Nelson T. Johnson, American Ambassador to China, telegraphed the State Department that Peck would return to Nanking today after getting in touch with some of the stranded missionaries.

The Chinese Central News Agency reported that Gen. Mao Tse-tung, chief commander of the Chinese Communist armies, had reached Sianfu and was supervising organization of the Shensi Communist administration.

Mao, a former newspaperman, has been one of the most rabid of the Communist leaders ever since the split in the Kuomintang revolution in 1927, which resulted in Generalissimo Chiang Kai-shek's rise to power on an anti-Communist program.

Other advices indicated that the Communists were consolidating their power in Shensi and that half-hearted efforts of Nanking to arrange a peaceful settlment of the revolt were making no headway.

Mercury to Fall Here; Midwest Battles Floods

Freezing Weather Is Due in City Today; Heavy Damage by Waters.

Freezing weather and northwest winds were forecast for Washington today as hundreds of lowlanders in the Middle West fled before the steady advance of flood waters.

The prediction for the District was fair and much colder, and in the western mountains of Maryland and Virginia snow flurries were expected.

In Washington yesterday the maximum temperature was 69 degrees, recorded at 4 a. m., when the minimum usually is reached.

In the path of the floods considerable damage was reported. Officials in Jay County, Ind., called conditions "the worst since 1913."

The high water disrupted railroad and interurban traffic in the inundated areas of the State, and nearly 100,000 acres were submerged near Evansville, while many highways were engulfed. A long freight train toppled from the rails near Edinburg.

Near Rombauer, Mo., the Associated Press reported that the brimming St. Francis River had broken through a levee, while the Black River was pouring through an embankment south of Poplar Bluff.

More than 100 families in the danger zone were evacuated by the National Guard, and 1,000 WPA workers swung into action, strengthening the sea walls. Bursting two levees, Clear Creek surged over 9 square miles in Union and Alexander counties, Illinois.

Near Vandalia, Ill., the turbulent Kaskaskia lapped near the top of the levee, and the Wabash went out of its banks and moved in a green mass across thousands of acres, forcing farmers to leave for higher ground and rural schools to close, while three mines were idle.

The Ohio River was swelled to within inches of its 52-foot flood stage at Cincinnati, but the forecaster said there was little danger of damaging inundation.

2,800 WPA Workers March On White House in Relief Plea

Congress and the White House yesterday heard the first massed cries of discontent since the re-election of President Roosevelt when 2,800 WPA workers, from 25 States, marched down Pennsylvania avenue clamoring for increased appropriations for work relief.

The demonstrators scattered to their homes last night after presenting demands for a $1,040,000,000 deficiency work relief appropriation and a 20 per cent increase in WPA salaries to Marvin McIntyre, Presidential secretary, at the White House; Vice President Garner, the House Progressive bloc and to Harper Sibley, president of the United States Chamber of Commerce.

"We were satisfied with the treatment we received from everyone except Speaker Bankhead, who ducked out of his office a few minutes before our delegation arrived to lay our demands before him," said Herman Benjamin, leader of the march.

Militant, but striving to outdo their police escort in courtesy, 2,800 WPA workers from 25 States marched yesterday to the White House, the United States Chamber of Commerce and the Capitol clamoring for a $1,040,000,000 deficiency relief appropriation.

Official participants in Capitol Hill ceremonies attending the Inauguration of President Roosevelt Wednesday were announced last night by Senator M. M. Neely, of West Virginia, chairman of a joint Congressional committee in charge of the induction exercises.

Vice President John N. Garner will be first to take the oath of office. On a stand at the east front of the Capitol he will be sworn in by Senator Joseph T. Robinson, of Arkansas, majority leader of the Senate.

The Vice President will make no address and President Roosevelt will follow him in renewing his oath of office. Chief Justice Charles Evans Hughes will administer the oath to President Roosevelt promptly at high noon. The Chief Executive's Inaugural address will follow.

Invocation at the ceremonies will be delivered by Mr. Ze Barney Phillips, chaplain of the Senate, and benediction will be offered by the Right Rev. John A. Ryan, of Catholic University.

Families to Have Seats.

Members of the House and Senate, the Diplomatic Corps and governors of the several States will occupy seats in stands directly adjacent to the Presidential platform.

For the first time in history, Rear Admiral Cary T. Grayson, general chairman of arrangements, said last night, the United States Army Band will vary its practice of playing strictly military airs during the Inaugural parade to play "Happy Days Are Here Again," theme song of the New Deal and favorite of the President.

This song, however, will be played only as the band passes the reviewing stand. Along the avenue, the Army Band will confine itself to official military marches. A preview of Inaugural music will be given by the band in a special radio broadcast over the National Broadcasting chain at 6 p. m. Monday.

A four-and-a-half-hour spectacle is promised for Inauguration Day, Admiral Grayson also announced. Starting at 11:30 a. m. when President Roosevelt leaves the White House for Capitol Hill, there will be "something doing every minute," Admiral Grayson said.

Details by Loud Speakers.

Public address systems have been placed in all reviewing stands and will carry eye-witness accounts of every detail from the time of the President's departure for the Capitol until he has again entered the White House to begin his second term in office.

When the Presidential party starts down Pennsylvania avenue, it will be accompanied—in addition to motorcycle escorts, press and secret service cars—by four scout cars of the United States Army. These scout cars, it was reported, are the Army's newest type of weapon. They will be occupied by buglers who will herald the President's approach.

En route to the Capitol, official cars in the procession will be occupied by Government officials and visiting dignitaries.

Admiral Grayson announced the appointment of additional members to the following committees:

General Inaugural Committee.
E. Hilton Jackson.
Public Order Committee.
Chester H. Gray, Mathias Mahorner.
Committee on Transportation.
J. T. Ward.
Committee on Housing and Hospitality.
W. B. Jarvis, James Sherwin, George Nowell, C. Edward Altemus, L. C. Leigh, E. G. Phelps, Perlis Hines, Doris Smyth, Mrs. Dess Griggs.

D. C. Sub-Committee To Be Named Today

Chairman Buchanan, of the House Appropriations Committee, stated last night that the name of the chairman and members of the District sub-committee will be announced today.

Unconfirmed reports continued to circulate that the post had been given to Representative Ross Collins, of Mississippi. The sub-committees of the House Appropriations Committee are the last groups to be named among the regular committees in either house.

Byrd's Economy Program Upset By Senate, 52-22

Committee Status Vague After Fight

Senator May Be Denied Post on Special Study Body.

By Robert C. Albright.

Senator Harry Flood Byrd's first independent move toward money-saving reorganization was garroted yesterday by the Senate which refused by a 52 to 22 vote to limit the life of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation to one year.

Then, by a 73 to 1 vote which left the Virginian standing in lone opposition, the chamber voted to continue RFC lending operation and the functions of four other emergency credit agencies until June 30, 1939.

It was the first floor clash of the conflicting reorganization policies of Senator Byrd, whose independent investigation was authorized last year by the Senate, and President Roosevelt, whose reorganization plan submitted early this week called for no immediate abolition of agencies.

Status Uncertain.

Whether Democratic leaders will attempt to complete the sidetracking of Byrd from Administration reorganization plans, by failing to name him to a committee to be set up to handle the President's report, could not be determined last night.

It was learned that leaders themselves have not decided definitely on their course. One plan is to enlarge membership of Byrd's own reorganization committee by adding two Administration Democrats and allow this revamped Senate group to co-operate with a House committee in forwarding the President's report. An alternative plan is to set up a new and special committee, with Byrd possibly not a member, to do the job.

A decision on reorganization procedure between the two houses is expected to be reached Monday. The House already has authorized a special committee, and a joint committee to work with the Senate.

Sought Amendment.

Byrd yesterday tried merely to amend the RFC extension resolution, to limit its life, and provide time for working out a comprehensive plan for consolidation of Government lending functions by June 30, 1938. Undismayed by his crushing defeat, he is expected to continue his fight through the session, building up a reorganization record which may prove useful in the future.

The final Senate vote for a two-and-a-half-year extension of RFC and the five other agencies found his sympathetic colleague, Senator Carter Glass, of Virginia, voting against Byrd.

"If I could think that the bill reported by the Banking and Currency Committee would result in the expenditure of a single wasteful dollar, I would not advocate it," said Glass.

Highly Regarded.

"I have great respect for my colleague as an expert on reorganization, but I believe that in this case reorganization is not involved."

Glass said "no agency of this Government has been administered with comparable efficiency" to RFC.

Behind yesterday's action of the Senate was the tremendous personal popularity and influence of Chairman Jesse Jones, of the RFC, whose well-managed agency was used as the spearhead of what promises to be a series of moves for extension.

Included in the RFC extension bill passed by the Senate were the RFC Mortgage Corporation, the Commodity Credit Corporation, the Export-Import Bank and the Electric Home and Farm Authority, with affiliated functions, all continued until June 30, 1939.

Republicans in Line.

Byrd, following a speech in which he said a two and one-half year extension of the RFC would "seriously interfere with an effective reorganization of the machinery of Government," was supported by virtually all of the Republicans and an equal number of Democrats in his effort to limit its life, but the preponderant Democratic majority, led by Senator Joseph T. Robinson, of Arkansas, overrode him.

He said no member of the Senate

Reorganization Progress

The Senate yesterday over-rode Senator Byrd, Virginia, in his opposition to the President's reorganization proposals, when it voted, 52 to 22, against limitation of the life of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation to one year.

Decision on procedure in handling the reorganization plan was forecast Monday.

The Department of Agriculture hastily withdraw its crop insurance bill when it was found to be in conflict in its administrative provisions with the President's plan.

Senator Gibson, Vermont, reintroduced his bill to extend the civil service retirement act to 1,500 legislative employes on Capitol Hill.

Early hearing was assured on the McCarran bill raising salaries of Federal workers and establishing a $1,500 minimum salary.

Leaders in Congress, labor and Government joined in expressions of determination to extend the merit system throughout the Federal service, in a radio observance of Civil Service Week. Page 15.

Bill Asks Civil Service Status On Capitol Hill

Gibson Offers Measure to Benefit Legislative Employes.

A bill to extend the Civil Service retirement act to more than 1,500 legislative employes on Capitol Hill was reintroduced in the Senate yesterday by Senator Gibson (Republican), of Vermont, as the McCarran Government pay increase bill was assured early hearings.

The Gibson bill would protect the older employes in the legislative service from dismissals without pensions, veterans such as Bert W. Kennedy, former House minority clerk, who was dropped this year by the Republican caucus after 40-odd years' service.

Classes of employes who would be accorded the retirement benefits now enjoyed by Civil Service workers include clerks to Senators and Representatives and committees of both houses, the Capitol police force, employes of joint committees, and legislative counsel.

Senator Bulow, chairman of the Senate Civil Service Committee, said that he will schedule hearings on the McCarran measure to raise all governmental salaries below $3,600 as soon as he obtains a report from the Civil Service Commission.

A companion bill is expected to be introduced in the House early next week.

As most of the leading Senators have expressed themselves as favorable to the general principle of raising the pay of low-bracket Government workers, the legislation is expected to obtain substantial backing although it may be revised before it reaches the Senate floor.

McCarran's bill, besides raising the average pay of Government employes now receiving less than $3,600 by $150 a year, would establish a minimum salary of $1,500 in the Government, extend the classification act to the field service and repeal the present system of efficiency ratings.

Canada Asks Data On Boat Boarding

Ottawa, Ontario, Jan. 15 (AP).—The Canadian government announced today it had asked Washington for a "statement of fact" concerning the alleged boarding of the Vancouver tugboat Prosperative by striking United States seamen.

When the statement is received, officials said, the Dominion government will make a decision on what, if any, representations are to be made.

The action followed upon receipt by Prime Minister Mackenzie King of a telegram from the Vancouver Merchants' Exchange protesting the boarding as "tantamount to piracy."

By the Associated Press.

The State Department received an inquiry yesterday from the Canadian government about the reported boarding of a Vancouver tugboat in Puget Sound Wednesday night by a group of striking United States seamen, and asked the Treasury for information.

First Lady Urges Club Women To Increase Peace Interests

In a surprise talk to representatives of the General Federation of Women's Clubs, who went yesterday to the White House for tea, Mrs. Roosevelt urged increased interest in peace and better housing.

"Nobody can say any of you are Red," said she, "so you can do more than many of us accused of being many things."

Although she did not refer to it by name, Mrs. Roosevelt also touched on a subject the women had discussed earlier in the day with Surgeon General Thomas Parran, of the United States Public Health Service, the control of syphilis.

She mentioned "Dr. Parran's recent conference," which mapped a plan for social disease control, "as the beginning of what I hope will be a great educational campaign."

Neutrality can get a nation into war, as well as keep it out, Miss Alves Long, of St. Louis, told the board of the federation at the Mayflower last night.

As chairman of the international relations department, Miss Long has made a special study of the peace problem as it affects America. As a result, she is convinced that the answer to the question "Why do we fear war?" is "neutrality, which got us into two wars and may get us had a "higher personal regard" for Jesse Jones, his business efficiency and "scrupulous regard for the saving of the taxpayers' money."

Byrd Economy Move Defeated By Senate Vote

"We have 19 emergency agencies of the Government created in the stress and trial of the crisis," said Byrd. "Congress recognized them as such and provided for their termination on a definite date.

Matter for Congress.

"One of the most difficult problems in the reorganization of the Federal Government is to determine definitely whether or not emergency functions should be made permanent. This decision should be met by Congress, as Congress created these agencies. * * *

"The most that is to be hoped for by those of us who believe that the time has come for a substantial reduction in public spending, the elimination of waste, extravagance and duplicated effort, is retrenchment and reform beginning on July 1, 1938. * * *

"If this resolution is passed it will mean that the 14 other emergency agencies will without doubt be given the same status and the reorganization likely deferred until the expiration date of the emergency agencies on July 1, 1939. I for one cannot agree that the crisis which made them necessary * * * will continue to exist for the next 2½ years."

Refers to Brookings.

Byrd called to light a bookkeeping "condition" he said was uncovered by Brookings Institution in its reorganization study.

Pointing out that the Federal Treasury carries as assets on its semiannual statement, notes and stocks of the RFC to the amount of $4,295,000,000, he said the public has been led to believe that the notes and stock are an actual asset, as represented by recoverable loans.

"The fact is," said Byrd, "that of this amount, $2,434,025,943, is represented by payments by the RFC to other Governmental agencies for expenses and most of these advances are not recoverable. Included in these advances is an item of $1,500,000,000 for direct relief expended by Mr. Hopkins. Certainly this is not recoverable."

Correction Asked.

He said he had sought explanations but had been told only that it may have been done to avoid large totals in the regular appropriation bills. He said the policy should be discontinued and a "correct statement" made by the Treasury.

"These notes, by reason of these diversions, are not worth 50 cents on the dollar in recoverable assets, notwithstanding the splendid management of the RFC in making safe loans," Byrd said. "The reports of the RFC make clear these loans, but the reports of the Treasury Department do not."

Pointing out that this was just one of a number of conditions in the "Federal jungle" he sought to remedy, he said "never before in our history has an opportunity existed such as it now does for constructive reorganization."

Glass Lauds Jones.

Senator Glass said he had no comment to make on Byrd's statement "on the concealment of Government expenditures," but believed his colleague's theory that passage of the RFC bill would set a precedent for continuation of other agencies "does not hold, for the reason that Jesse Jones is not at the head of all other agencies."

Glass said he was authorized to say that other agencies in the RFC bill are being liquidated as rapidly as possible.

"So far as the Export-Import Bank is concerned," added Glass, "I never did think it was worth a three pence."

"But if the Senator wants my opinion," he said, "it is going to be very difficult to abolish any of these emergency agencies."

Byrd's No Is Alone.

Following defeat of Byrd's amendment, the RFC extension was passed by a voice vote. Majority Leader Robinson nevertheless ordered an "aye" and "no" tally, which left Byrd casting the sole "no."

Another conflict with Administration reorganization plans developed yesterday, when the Agriculture Department sent to Capitol Hill a crop insurance measure, setting up an independent Federal crop insurance administration. The President's plan would place existing independent agencies under the regular department.

Senator Pope (Democrat), of Idaho, who plans to sponsor the crop insurance measure, conferred with Secretary of Agriculture Wallace, and the bill went back to the department for revision.

Pope said "the President's reorganization message has made further consideration of the crop insurance bill necessary," adding that it will be presented in a form that will not conflict. The new agency probably will be placed under the Agriculture Department.

Roosevelt Plan to Extend Merit System Would Remove Patronage as Congress Whip.

By Franklyn Waltman

IN some quarters opposed to one or another of the President's proposals for reorganization of the Federal Government, the suggestion has been projected that the net result of this program, if it is enacted in full, would be to lodge in Mr. Roosevelt and his successors greater power than the Chief Executive of this Nation has ever possessed.

WALTMAN.

Anticipating such contentions, Mr. Roosevelt in his reorganization message to Congress denied he was recommending an increase in the powers of the Presidency. He held that the full executive power was lodged by the Constitution in the President and that what he was asking was not more power, but "the tools of management and the authority to distribute the work so the President can effectively discharge those powers which the Constitution now places upon him."

I think the President could have made a good argument that while the adoption of his program in full would increase his authority over the executive branch of the Government, actually he was surrendering the instruments of power which Presidents from the beginning of the Republic have exercised over the legislative branch of the Government and thus he would enjoy less power.

Such an argument would be based on the President's proposal for expanding the merit system to the entire Federal personnel with the exception of policy-making posts and a few positions of a highly confidential nature. Adoption of that proposal would mean the death of political patronage—the whip of the President over Congress.

Constitutional separation and independence of three branches of the Federal Government—executive, legislative and judicial—are now too well known to require recitation here. All can recall the words of the Supreme Court invalidating certain New Deal measures to the effect that legislative functions cannot be delegated to the executive. All are acquainted with recent criticisms that the Supreme Court allegedly has usurped legislative power and every adult knows what is meant when it is asserted that Congress has become "a rubber stamp" to the President.

Anyone familiar with the functioning of the Federal Government knows that while theoretically the President has no authority over Congress, actually he does have and exercises such power. The President for all practical purposes is the leader of his party on Capitol Hill. He brings pressure for the adoption of those measures he desires and uses pressure to block proposals. It is inevitable that the President should attempt to direct the course of legislative proposals. As long as moral suasion and reasoning are the only instruments used by the President in this effort it is above criticism.

But everyone familiar with the actual operation of the Federal Government knows that the President does not rule Capitol Hill by moral suasion alone. He rules it through fear and intimidation, made possible by his powers over patronage and political favors. Thus recalcitrant party members are whipped into line for or against pending measures by fear of a loss of patronage—sometimes openly threatened—or in the hope that their claims and requests will be more favorably considered if they "play ball" with the President and his Cabinet.

Many a man has been named a district attorney or a bureau chief or a member of an independent agency, not because of his aptitude and merit for the job, but because the Senator sponsoring him "voted right" on a given bill—"right," meaning as the President wished him to vote, even though in his heart the Senator would feel he was voting wrong.

And many a Senator has been stripped of all patronage and left politically impotent in his home State because he opposed his party's program. For an illustration, one need not go back beyond the case of Senator Rush D. Holt, of West Virginia. But the system does not stop there. When a Senator's nominee is named head of a bureau, he has influence in that bureau and can get things done for constituents having business with that bureau. The bureau chief, it must be remembered, is under obligation to the Senator. And all this has become known as "the spoils system" and it should be abolished.

But look at the effect on the relations between the executive and legislative branches of Government in abolishing it. Where is the President's whip hand over Congress? He—or his Cabinet officers—can no longer intimidate, overtly or impliedly, a recalcitrant Senator. There is nothing he can do to those who vote against his wishes. And with the Federal bureaus staffed with career men, who owe no obligations to members of Congress for their jobs, there will be no favoritism or pap there to be used to get recalcitrants into line.

Of course, only a naive person would contend expansion of the merit system throughout the Federal personnel as suggested would end log-rolling between the executive and legislative branches. Cabinet officers undoubtedly would feel kindly toward those members of Congress who supported their proposals and would give short shrift to those opposing them.

But the real power of the President over Congress would be gone—and it would be free to exercise its full legislative prerogative. Thus the actual power of the President would be lessened. But we would be hewing closer to the constitutional division of powers than we are now.

Many New York State officials, some of whom have already arrived for the Inaugural ceremonies, have expressed their intention of attending.

2,800 March In Capitol Plea For WPA Help

weary woman who became separated from her New York delegation in the New House Office Building marred the determination of Metropolitan and Capitol police to handle the march without disorder.

The woman was ejected from the House Office Building by the Capitol police after a short struggle and her comrades, pleading with police and fellow marchers not to lose their heads, quickly placed her in a taxicab.

At that moment David Lasser and Herbert Benjamin, with 25 State delegates of the Workers Alliance, which sponsored the march, were conferring in the office building with a Progressive bloc of 21 Congressmen.

The marchers, elected delegates of Workers Alliance units who claimed they represented 12,000,000 persons dependent upon WPA wages, roundly booed the United States Chamber of Commerce while their leaders were inside offering Harper Sibley, president of the Chamber, to take every Workers' Alliance member off WPA rolls if jobs for them could be found in private industry.

"It is not Chamber of Commerce policy to abruptly halt relief," Sibley told leaders of the march. "We believe it should be tapered off."

White House First.

The marchers first paraded to the White House where a delegation was received by Marvin McIntyre, secretary to the President. He promised the delegates that he would place their demands immediately before the President.

While the delegation conferred with McIntyre the marchers outside chanted:

President Roosevelt has asked Congress for a $650,000,000 deficiency appropriation to support WPA until July 1. WPA records showed 2,284,000 at work on relief jobs on December 12.

Walk 4-Abreast.

As the marchers left the White House and started down Pennsylvania avenue carrying banners identifying various workers on relief projects, police instructed them to walk four-abreast so as not to interfere with traffic.

At the head of the column was Inspector Edward J. Kelly who kept a wary eye on rookie policeman and consulted with Benjamin and Lasser at frequent intervals. Kelly delivered the march to the Capitol police without a single harsh word being passed between police and the marchers.

Rebuffed at Capitol.

Capitol police insisted that the marchers could not enter the House Office Buildings to confer with their Congressmen in groups larger than five and unless they stripped their Workers' Alliance badges from their coats. A Capitol-policeman was assigned to accompany each delegation into the building.

Within a short time the Capitol police force exhausted its available guides and more than 500 marchers were lined before the doors. An appeal was made to Benjamin and Lasser to disperse their followers but they retorted that the march was over and the groups at the doors represented private citizens seeking conferences with their Congressmen.

Benjamin and Lasser had assured police that the marchers would courteously observe every police regulation and urged police to cooperate with them to preserve order.

Whenever excited members of any group protested against police commands, unit leaders shouted:

"Come on now, we don't want any trouble."

Before the march started, Lesser told WPA delegates:

"The people voted on November 3 for an adequate program for unemployment relief and we are determined that that program shall be carried out."

He declared that the $650,000,000 requested by President Roosevelt was "utterly insufficient and, in fact, a repudiation of the mandate of the American people voiced in the recent election."

Twenty-one Congressmen received leaders of the march in the Congressional Library Committee room in the new House Office Building. Represetnative Kent Keller (Democrat), of Illinois, chairman of the committee, welcomed the delegates to his office and said:

Consideration Pledged.

"I hope you get what you came here after."

Representative Gerald Boileau, of Wisconsin, acted as chairman of the hearing, and assured Lasser that the Workers Alliance demands would be given serious consideration in the House.

Lasser pointed out that State and municipal Legislatures and organizations of business men in the State had formed a "united front" with the Alliance to demand increased appropriations. He recalled that the Conference of Mayors had made demands almost identical with those of the Alliance.

Delegates from farm States warned that farmers in the Dakotas are organizing marches to confiscate supplies in warehouses and coal yards.

Copies of the Alliance demands were taken by committees to the offices of Vice President Garner and Speaker of the House Bankhead. After receiving reports from the committee chairmen last night the marchers began leaving the city. All but a handful will have departed today, it was said.

President Hints Lakes-Seaway Fight Revival

New Treaty Conference Discussed With Canada, Roosevelt Reveals.

Revival of the fight for the long-projected St. Lawrence waterway and power project was indicated yesterday.

President Roosevelt, at his press conference, made it known the Administration has been discussing with Canada the possibility of a conference on a new treaty to make the development possible.

The disclosure follows by only a few weeks the action of Frank P. Walsh, chairman of the New York State power authority, and close friend of the President, who charged here that private power interests are "attempting to sidetrack the project." He said that utility interests in this country are "reaching out to form an alliance with private power interests in Quebec in order to form an international private power pool against public development in the international section of the St. Lawrence."

The President said he had no idea whether negotiations could reach the point where a treaty would be ready for submission to the Senate at this session. Asked whether the treaty would include a Niagara Falls power and improvement project, the President said physical aspects of the former treaty included everything from Duluth to tidewater.

A treaty rejected by the last Senate called for co-operation between the two countries to complete a 27-foot channel from the lakes to the Atlantic. It has been pointed out, however, that a number of Senators who voted against the treaty were not returned to the Senate in the 1936 election. Estimates of the cost of the project have ranged from $250,000,000 to $1,350,000,000.

The rejected treaty provided that New York State would receive all of this country's share of 1,1000,000 horsepower of electricity to be generated at an international dam, and the State would pay $89,000,000 of the cost of the project.

Crowded Prisons Assailed by Bates

By the Associated Press.

Sanford Bates, director of Federal prisons, reported to Attorney General Cummings yesterday that "grievously overcrowded" Government penal institutions are operated under conditions found in "no other civilized nation."

"The most populous prison in Great Britain houses less than 1,000 men," Bates said. In this country on December 25, there were 3,120 Federal prisoners confined in Atlanta Penitentiary, 2,972 in Leavenworth main prison and 1,329 in Northeastern.

"We cannot dismiss our responsibility for this condition with the statement that money must be devoted to other more pleasant purposes before we can afford the building of prisons," Bates said.

The population of Federal penal institutions increased during 1936 as follows: Penitentiaries, 221; reformatories, 40; prison camps, 62; Springfield Hospital, 112; Federal jails, 29; National Training School for Boys, 61. The number of persons on probation increased 4,515.

Measure Provides Talmadge Inquiry

Atlanta, Jan. 15 (AP).—State Senator Paul Lindsay said today he was drafting a bill which would "appropriate all the money necessary" for a legislative investigation of Eugene Talmadge's administration as Governor of Georgia.

Talmadge, whose New Deal criticisms and one-man control of State finances drew Democratic opposition, relinquished the executive's office to E. D. Rivers, Lakeland lawyer, on Tuesday.

Lindsay said the provisions for "all the money necessary" was devised so "we would not find ourselves tied, midway."

Plans for the inquiry were in the platform upon which Rivers won the Democratic Gubernatorial Nomination over two opponents last September 9. In the same primary, Talmadge was defeated by Senator Richard B. Russell, jr., for the United States Senate nomination.

A. & P. Announces Wage, Hour Policy

In a message to employes made public yesterday, John A. Hartford, president of the Great Atlantic & Pacific Tea Co., announced a minimum wage and minimum hour policy now being put into effect throughout the chain.

Hartford said that in the last year more than $1,200,000 had been spent to increase wages. He said it had also been voted to give full-time clerks vacations with full pay.

In his letter, Hartford explained sickness and accident benefits established by the company, and declared that the new wage and hour policy would provide that clerks be paid for overtime at the same hourly rate received during store hours. The A. & P. president said he was opposed to long hours in the grocery business.

Bonnet, New French Envoy Is Noted as Financial Expert

Ambassador Disclaims Special Mission Here on War Debts.

By Russell Smith.

When he is in America, M. Georges Bonnet, appointed today to succeed Andre de LaBoulaye as French ambassador to the United States, very probably will do as the French do, for he is as Gallic as the clear wines of Provence.

M. Bonnet's appointment was confirmed in dispatches from Paris last night, after it had been predicted for some weeks he would be sent here specifically to negotiate a new Franco-American war-debt settlement.

Although the new ambassador said yesterday, according to the Associated Press, that he is charged "with no special mission concerning war debts," the belief prevails both here and in Paris that imminence of such negotiations is at least partially responsible for his coming.

A Financial Expert.

Certainly his background indicates he is admirably fitted for such a mission, for part of his extreme Frenchness is his concern for financial affairs and his aptitude in their conduct.

He is 47 years old, began his national political career when he was 34 and has held during those 13 years ten cabinet positions in such varied cabinets as those of Painleve, Chautemps, Steeg, Herriot, Paul-Boncour, Deladier and Sarraut.

In all of these he has been concerned primarily with commerce or finance, save for brief tenures. He served in three successive cabinets—those of Deladier, Sarraut and Chautemps in 1933-34—as minister of finance, and in 1933 headed the French delegation to the London economic conference.

Knows Secretary Hull.

At that time his championship of the gold franc won him fame at a time when the dollar cut loose. Not only did his conduct of the French policy at this time add to his stature in French politics, but it led to an acquaintance with Secretary Hull which should render their contact here smoother and more pleasant.

In January, 1934, when the Laval cabinet fell and Albert Sarraut was charged with the responsibility of forming a new cabinet, Bonnet was only a short step away from the premiership.

If Sarraut had been liable to form a cabinet, as appeared likely in the then confused state of French politics, Bonnet was regarded generally as the man to whom the nation would turn next. His position at that time was doubly strong, due to the strenuous battle of French conservatives to preserve the gold franc and to his battle for that cause at the economic conference.

Strong Gallic Quality.

Bonnet's Gallic quality is so strong as to make him almost a symbol of his people. Even more than Pierre Laval, whom Washington recalls as a typical Frenchman, does he represent his nation.

A native of Dordogne, Bonnet comes from southwest France, from a rural district which was formed in 1790 from Perigord and portions of three other departments. And Perigord truffles—delight of the French epicure—are perhaps the most famous product of that district.

Bonnet has represented accurately his constituents, who are mostly farmers and small merchants, as is testified by his membership in the Radical Socialist Party, a moderate left group, headed by Edouard Daladier, of which Bonnet is now vice president. The party stands to the left of the conservatives but is less radical than the true Socialists. Its platform differs little from that of some wings of our own Democratic Party.

His arrival in Washington, however, will deprive President Roosevelt of the companionship of an old friend, for de LaBoulaye, the retiring ambassador, was counselor of the French Embassy here while Mr. Roosevelt was Assistant Secretary of the Navy during the World War.

Ormiston Dies; Was a Figure In Aimee Case

By the Associated Press.

Los Angeles, Jan. 15.—Kenneth E. Ormiston, 41, a key figure in the investigation of Aimee Semple McPherson's sensational "kidnap" episode more than a decade ago, died today following an operation.

The radio engineer and one-time employe at Aimee's Angelus Temple, underwent an appendix operation Sunday.

Of Sister Aimee's many publicized incidents, none drew the attention that attended her startling disappearance from a beach near Los Angeles in the spring of 1926 and the investigation which followed her reappearance.

Clad in a bathing suit, she vanished so suddenly it was feared she had drowned.

Her mother, Mrs. Minnie (Ma) Kennedy, was so certain of her daughter's death she declared Aimee undoubtedly was "in the arms of Jesus."

But six weeks later the comely evangelist reappeared in Mexico, across the border from Douglas, Ariz., with a story she had been abducted and held prisoner by unidentified kidnapers.

For the past several years Ormiston had been employed as an engineer by the Columbia Broadcasting Co.

$830,000 Relief Sum Demaded For Current Aid

Representatives of Social Agencies Council Call on Commissioners.

Urgent emands for a supplemental $830,000 District relief appropriation to meet welfare needs until the end of the current fiscal year were laid before the Commissioners yesterday by representatives of 30 charitable organizations, all members of the Council of Social Agencies.

Any immediate action by the Commissioners, however, was tabled pending further conferences with a special committee of five welfare leaders to be chosen from among the petitioners.

Spokesmen included Joseph P. Tumulty, former secretary to President Wilson, representing the Catholic Charities; the Rev. Russell J. Clinchy, president of the Council of Social Agencies; Canon Anson Phelps Stokes, speaking for the Family Service Association; Walter Ufford, of the Monday Evening Club, and Mrs. David Cushman Coyle, of the Voteless League of Women Voters.

Need Increases.

Demands for relief in Washington are increasing steadily rather than decreasing, the Commissioners were told. Approximately 4,000 families now on relief have no members classed as "employables," the welfare leaders said, and if support of the proposed additional appropriation is refused, these people could get neither employment nor relief.

Citing four problems considered by the welfare groups in requesting support of the supplemental funds, the Rev. Clinchy said:

"We understand the problem of taxation and recognize the factors that may mean larger payments for citizens of the District; we are aware of the President's need to reduce the budget as better times come; we want you to understand that we are not asking a Federal appropriation but a municipal appropriation and the Council of Social Agencies is as much interested as others in getting people off the relief rolls."

Canon Stokes Speaks.

Canon Stokes said he would be much more willing to have his taxes increased now rather than face the ultimate cost of neglecting or ignoring the present demands for relief.

When the Commisioners indicated that securing additional funds would present a serious problem, Tumulty declared:

"If you are human beings—and not just Commissioners—you will find ways and means of getting this money."

Maj. Daniel J. Donovan, District auditor and budget officer, pointed out that unless Congress takes some extraordinary action, the city will not have available funds to meet the relief request until next July.

Taxpayers Unit Objects.

"We are at present facing a deficit of $1,500,000," Maj. Donovan said, "and under the proposed new budget for 1938 an additional deficit of $10,000,000 has been placed on us."

Recently, the Washington Taxpayers Association cited numerous objections to the proposed relief measure, contending it would "throw another monkey wrench into our already creaking financial machine."

Commisioner Hazen said he would do everything possible to meet the demands and agreed to meet further with the special committee of five to be appointed by the Council of Social Agencies.

First Lady Talks To Club Women into another unless we replace the old doctrine of asserting our right, as a neutral, to trade with belligerents, by a program of embargo legislation."

Pointing out that the recent decision of the Supreme Court confirming the constitutionality of embargo legislation gives encouragement to those who believe that a law providing for embargo legislation is the best guarantee against war, Miss Long urged club women to continue "to keep the subject of the World Court alive. Disarmament is an ideal that must never die," she continued, "and there can be disarmament only through international agreement. It must not be merely a military disarmament, but a moral and economic disarmament as well."

Others who took part in the discussion centering around international relations were Miss Grace Morrison Poole, Mrs. Sadie Orr Dunbar, Mrs. Edward Dexter Knight and Mrs. Harvey Wiley.

At an earlier meeting of the board yesterday, Mrs. William Dick Sporborg pledged the support of the G. F. W. C. to a bill requiring registration of pistols and revolvers.

Campaign Charted.

Later, the board charted a campaign against syphilis after hearing an address by Dr. Thomas H. Parran, surgeon general of the U. S. Public Health Service, in which he said, "the subject of syphilis is closely related to that of maternal mortality. There is a great opportunity for organization all over the country to assist in the eradication of this great cause of ill health."

In outlining a campaign in this regard, Mrs. Clarence Fraim, of Wilmington, Del., public welfare chairman of the federation, said "we feel that women can be of great service by enlisting in the great battle against this social disease which is a destroyer of mankind and can be transmitted from the mother to an unborn child."

The meeting of the board will continue through this morning. Features scheduled for today's session include an address by Mrs. Richmond Page, of the federation's radio committee, on "Glimpses of Welfare Work in Puerto Rico," and a talk by W. Roy Breg, executive secretary of Allied Youth on "Youth Temperance Education."

Conant and Mansbridge Amuse Convention of 250 Educators

Briton Sees Baseball as Child's Game, Football Silly; Verbal Pyrotechnics Keep Meeting Hilarious; McConaughy to Head Group.

A brisk roundtable luncheon display of wit, featuring as star endmen, Dr. James B. Conant, president of Harvard University, and Albert Mansbridge, former royal commissioner of Oxford and Cambridge Universities, with Ernest S. Griffith, dean of the graduate school of American University, in the role of interlocutor, kept 250 educators alert and laughing for an hour yesterday. The occasion was the finale of the twenty-third annual meeting of the Association of American Colleges, at the Mayflower.

Dr. Conant, youthful, trim and sharp, found an amiable and Chestertonian rival in large, pipe-smoking English Dr. Mansbridge, who makes a muff of his coat sleeves like a Chinaman whenever he talks.

Conant was asked first about the greatly expanded courses of modern high school curricula. Said he:

"There have been many strange new arrivals on our academic books. They startle some of us. If I were a house detective, I am sure I would have to arrest some of them merely on appearance, if only because they wear the flashy clothes of highly suspicious characters."

Sees 20 Per Cent With Brains.

Dr. Mansbridge next was asked about the supposed intellectual superiority of Oxford students over American. He arose, squinted through his glasses, put his hands in his coat sleeves, and remarked:

"All our students, of course, being English, are extremely intelligent, except those who aren't. Seriously, I should say that about 20 per cent of the finest students in England have intellectual capacity, which is no doubt about what you have here, but, ah, humph! Why talk about that?"

What does an English educationalist think about American emphasis on athletics, Dr. Griffith said some one in the audience wanted to know. After pondering this a while, Dr. Mansbridge replied:

"When one of your football teams goes away off somewhere, the farther the better, apparently, and brings back something or other as a trophy, all the university has to stop. Everything automatically ceases. Why? Why is this? Because they're all down to the railroad station.

Baseball "Game for Children."

"Well," he added ruefully, "that seems to be about all I know about your athletics. Ah, yes. It seems to me that here there's more looking on than doing. Another thing, you do not seem to enjoy cricket. It's our great sport, which, alas, has not commended itself to you. You prefer baseball. Baseball came out of England, where it was called 'rounders,' a game for small children" (with contempt).

"You seem to be having some trouble here with people being paid. There are no paid sports people in England. Though there was a time when a person who had extraordinary skill at cricket could obtain admission to Oxford or Cambridge even though he could not spell the name of his college."

Too Much Attempted.

Dr. Conant was asked about the diversification of studies in American colleges. He believed that collegians attempt too much, should concentrate instead on a few well-chosen subjects. (He personally recommended history as the basis for a working philosophy). He said:

"If a student in America were given three hours to concentrate on one subject he would die of shock. As it now is, he has to jump from algebra to tap dancing to Cherokee to Choctaw. Instead of mastery of a field, our students emerge from college with a wonderful smattering of everything."

A Southern professor leaped to his feet and accused Harvard collegians of not having a broad education. "Why!" he exclaimed, "our football team was playing yours at Cambridge and our cheering section was calling your boys 'damn Yankees,' but they quit after the half because they realized no Harvard man had had enough history to know what we were talking about."

Dr. Conant blushed at this indictment, while Dr. Mansbridge chuckled heartily.

James L. McConaughy, president of Wesleyan University, Middletown, Conn., was chosen president of the association. He has been vice president. He succeeds President James R. McCain, of Agnes Scott College, Decatur, Ga.

John L. Seaton, president of Albion College Albion, Mich., was named vice president. Guy E. Snavely, president of Birmingham Southern College, Birmingham, Ala., was named executive secretary. He succeeds Dr. Robert L. Kelly, of New York City, who held the office for 19 years. LeRoy E. Kimball, comptroller of New York University, will continue as treasurer.

Members of the executive committee, in addition to the association officers, are as follows: Remsen D. Bird, president of Occidental College, Los Angeles; Edward V. Stanford, president of Villanova College, and Raymond Walters, president of the University of Cincinnati. The latter two were re-elected.

College Head Resigns.

Birmingham, Ala., Jan. 15 (AP).—Dr. Guy E Snavely, president of Birmingham-Southern College, here since 1921, announced his resignation from that post today in a telegram to his faculty.

The message said he was resigning to accept the secretaryship of the Association of American Colleges.

Dr. Wyatt W. Hale, dean and registrar of the college, said students were organizing a mass gathering to greet Dr. Snavely when he returns here Soturday to ask him to reconsider the move.

The college faculty wired him today:

"Your telegram terrific blow. Faculty by unanimous action joins in sincerely urging you to reconsider."

Deputies to Guard Confessed Slayer

New York, Jan. 15 (AP).—Extra guards were assigned today to Major Greene, 33, colored porter, who has confessed the hammer slaying of Mrs. Mary Harriet Case, as a result of an umbrella assault on him last night by a crowd of women.

Sheriff Arthur G. Jaeger of Queens County, taking cognizance of the crowd's cries of "Lynch him!" said deputy sheriffs would surround the prisoner hereafter when he travels between courtroom and jail cell.

200 Alabama Concerns Appeal Security Ruling

Birmingham, Ala., Jan. 15 (AP).—Attorneys for 200 Alabama firms appealed today the decision of United States District Judge David J. Davis holding the Federal social security act valid under the "general welfare" clause of the Constitution.

The appeal, which will be argued before the circuit court at New Orleans, attacked virtually every particular cited in Judge Davis' ruling.

Van Devanter Still May Face Virginia Trial

Hunting Law Violation May Force Venerable Judge Into Court.

crouched behind a duck blind near Occoquan, Va., 35 miles from here, when Deputy Game Warden George King and a Virginia State deputy warden happened along, looking for game violators.

Asked to show their hunting licenses, Justice Van Devanter and Chaplain Phillips produced them. On that of Chaplain Phillips was pasted a $1 Federal stamp, as required by a law enacted by Congress in 1934 to raise funds with which to establish wildfowl refuges. Justice Van Devanter's license, it is alleged, bore no such stamp.

"You haven't got a duck stamp," Warden King reminded the venerable jurist.

"Duck stamp?" Van Devanter is reported to have replied, "What do you mean?"

When Warden King explained the law and its purposes, Justice Van Devanter is reported to have said:

"Indeed, I'm sorry. I assure you that I'm heartily in favor of anything that will help conserve ducks, and I'll stop at the postoffice on my way back and buy the stamp."

Told by Chaplain Phillips who Justice Van Devanter was and impressed by the sincerity of the latter, the game warden saluted and rowed away.

Attorney General Homer Cummings was told of Justice Van Devanter's misadventure the day before Christmas. He chuckled and observed that the Justice was deserving of Christmas clemency.

But many American sportsmen, together with magazines that cater to sportsmen, saw no reason why the Christmas season, Justice Van Devanter's ignorance of the law or his prominence was any reason why he should be let off. And they have been saying so in emphatic terms.

Boarman Rites Held as Scores Throng Church

Slain Trio and Murderer Carried to Graves by Son's Classmates.

Members of the class in Agricultural Education at the University of Maryland were together yesterday for the last time.

Then the body of Bill Boarman, 21-year-old University of Maryland graduate student, was borne away on the shoulders of four members of his fraternity, Alpha Gamma Rho, while the other members of Prof. Harold F. Cotterman's class stood with bowed heads in silent prayer.

"I couldn't bear to enter the classroom, so I adjourned the class and all of us attended the funeral services," Prof. Cotterman said.

The last time the class met was Monday, the day before Bill was slain with his mother, Mrs. Frances Boarman, and his sister, Margaret Boarman.

All three were victims of the maniacal fury of Corbin E. Boarman, 65-year-old retired telephone company employe, who ended the carnage by throwing himself under a B. & O. freight train.

At St. Anthony's Catholic Church, in Brookland, where funeral services were held yesterday for all four members of the family, the somber gray caskets were lined in the middle aisle between the throngs of persons who had come to witness the rites.

Eternal life and subservience to the will of God was the text of the Rev. Thomas Sweeney at the close of the solemn requiem mass.

Mary D. Boarman, who escaped the fate that befell the rest of her family when her father's gun jammed as he shot at her the second time, yesterday was informed of the tragedy at Sibley Hospital, where she is a patient.

Inquest Held.

At an inquest at the Mount Rainier town hall last night, William F. Ryan, Mary Boarman's fiance, told how the elder Boarman had attempted to kill them both when they drove into the driveway of the home Tuesday night.

Boarman fired his pistol at Mary, the bullet passing through her right forearm and grazing Ryan's head, the testimony revealed.

The verdict of the jury simply stated that the three members of the Boarman family came to their death at the hands of the father.

Doctors May Cut Opening in Throat Closed 26 Years

Boston, Jan. 15 (AP).—Viola Kirtley, 35, Nebraska City buisnesswoman, entered a hospital today for a period of observation and examination, during which surgeons will decide whether they will operate in an effort to re-open her throat, closed since she was 9 years old.

Miss Kirtley said other specialists previously told her she had "one chance in a million" of surviving an operation to restore her esophagus.

Although compelled for many years to take nourishment through a tube inserted in her stomach, Miss Kirtley has held an important place in the business world and traveled extensively as a publisher's agent.

Flogging Case Mystery Clew Finally Cleared

Birmingham Phone Number Links Guardsman, T.C. I. Company.

By the Associated Press.

Senate investigators used a hitherto mysterious telephone number yesterday to link the Tennessee Coal, Iron and Railroad Co. with a National Guard officer whom an Alabama flogging victim had identified as one of his assailants.

The number, Birmifigham 3-2664, had bobbed up repeatedly as the Senate civil liberties committee sought details of the abduction and flogging of Joseph S. Gelders, Southern representative of the National Committee for the Defense of Political Prisoners.

Officials of the "T. C. I.," as the company, subsidiary of U. S. Steel, is known in Alabama, were asked Thursday if they were familiar with the number. They said they had no knowledge of it. One of them was Borden Burr, T. C. I. counsel who introduced Alfred E. Smith at the famous Liberty League dinner a year ago.

Chairman LaFollette produced a letter from the telephone company at Birmingham, saying it was the number of an unlisted telephone in the T. C. I. offices and a witness told of using it repeatedly to reach Capt. Walter J. "Crack" Hanna, the officer in question.

Previous testimony had been Hanna was "supposed to be connected with T. C. I." as a special investigator in labor matters. An investigator for the State police who handled the Gelders case attributed failure to obtain an indictment of Hanna to fear that it might antagonize the T. C. I.

Yelverton Cowherd, Alabama attorney, and yesterday's principal witness, told of a conversation with Hanna on the day of the flogging. He said Hanna asked "what are we going to do about that so-and-so Gelders," at that time agitating for the release of a young Communist held in jail without bail, under a law since declared unconstitutional.

Another witness, Carey E. Haigler, testified Hanna had told him he was employed by T. C. I.

Posse Combing Virginia Woods For Murderer

Special Dispatch to The Post.

Fredericksburg, Va., Jan. 15.—Spotsylvania County officers, State police and a large posse tonight were combing the woods near Massaphonax, ten miles from here, for William S. Clark, 59, who Sheriff Maxie L. Blades said shot and killed his younger brother, S. Judd Clark, 56, before the eyes of their 86-year-old mother this morning, and then fled from the house.

The hunt, which started this morning, centered tonight near the Clark home in a thickly wooded section where Clark is believed hiding.

The younger Clark, police say, was shot first in the back with a shotgun by his brother who had entered a room of the Clark house where they both resided with their mother. Sheriff Blades said as the wounded man turned and lurched to the center of the room another blast was fired, striking him in the heart. Clark fled from the house with the shotgun.

The two brothers, according to officials, had been estranged for many months. There was no quarrel this morning and the killing came without warning soon after breakfast.

Police said the two quarreled over the sale of a tract of timber on the Clark farm, owned by their mother, Mrs. Bettie Clark, more than a year ago, and since that time had been constantly at odds.

Simpson, Band Leader, Freed In Girl's Death

3-Judge Court Holds State Failed to Make Out Case Against Him.

By the Associated Press.

Norwich, Conn., Jan. 15.—A three-judge tribunal today acquitted Robert A. Simpson, blond band leader, of blame in the death of 17-year-old Ellen Sullivan, after the State joined defense counsel in a motion to dismiss charges of murder and criminal assault.

Said presiding Justice Earnest A. Inglis after a few moments' conference with his fellows:

"The judges are of the unanimous opinion that the State has failed to make out a case of either murder or rape against the accused. For that reason the case is dismissed, the accused is found not guilty and ordered discharged."

The curly-haired Simpson, center of the summer seashore sensation that flared after the girl died, ran to his mother, Mrs. Arthur Simpson, who sat in the court room with Mrs. Maude Sullivan, mother of the dead girl.

Mrs. Sullivan covered her face with her hands and shuddered, saying only:

"I'm not disappointed. I'm satisfied with the verdict."

The 23-year-old band leader was accused of causing the injuries which resulted in the death of Miss Sullivan, a telephone operator, in a hospital at New London last July 20.

She had plunged 25 feet from the window of the Dancelanc Casino at Ocean Beach early in the morning of July 18.

Leaders View Lull in Strikes As Temporary

G. M. C. Truce Engineered by Gov. Murphy Praised by Miss Perkins.

By William V. Nessly.

Difficulties in the way of a settlement of the automobile strike are by no means dissolved or materially softened by yesterday's truce, in the view of officials here. Those high in the Administration who have been active in seeking peace were highly pleased by the new development, but is was realized that serious problems remain in the issues that led to the widespread tieup in General Motors Corporation plants.

This feeling was strengthened by a statement from John L. Lewis, head of the Committee for Industrial Organization, saying that in the negotiations with General Motors officials, beginning Monday, representatives of the workers "will insist upon formal recognition of the union as the exclusive bargaining agency for the industry." This demand was followed a few hours later by a statement from General Motors, made public here, which said that "no right of any workers not represented by unions will be prejudiced in any of the proposed negotiations."

Lewis' demands will be hotly contested by unions in the American Federation of Labor, which have members in the General Motors plants, and which have never authorized the strike. The corporation on January 9 wired John P. Frey, president of the metal trades department of the federation, that it "has no intention of entering into any agreement with any organization interfering with any legitimate jurisdiction of the international unions" affiliated with Frey's department.

Developments in U. S.

Negotiations to end the flat glass strike that preceded the automobile tie-up were progressing rapidly and apparently favorably.

Settlement of the West Coast shipping tie-up was believed imminent as ship owners conducted a protracted meeting at San Francisco.

The National Labor Relations Board ordered reinstatement of two Newspaper Guild members whose discharge caused the strike and long suspension of publication of the Seattle Post-Intelligencer.

Secretary of Labor Perkins was highly pleased by the accord reached by representatives of both sides in the auto dispute, meeting with Gov. Frank Murphy, at Lansing, and heartily praised the Governor for his "courageous" activity when, at several points in Thursday's conference, a break-up seemed imminent. Se said Murphy had done a "magnificent" job, and that his personal guarantee has given both sides confidence. She saw in the truce "every intention on both sides to reach an agreement in two weeks," although admitting there are "still big problems ahead."

Whether the workers had given up more than the operators in terms of the truce was a matter she had not weighed, the Secretary said, pointing out that while the "sit-down" strikers had agreed to leave the plants, they had won a concession in the promise not to operate the properties during the negotiations. The "sit-downers'" object, she pointed out, was to block production, and the agreement accomplished that.

Conciliator Coming.

James F. Dewey, conciliator representing Secretary Perkins, who sat in on the Lansing conference, is coming to Washington to report on the situation over the week-end. He will return to Detroit for the negotiations opening Monday.

Phillip Murray, director of the C. I. O. steel organization campaign, went to Pittsburgh yesterday to represent the Lewis organization in the negotiations over the Pittsburgh Plate Glass Company strike.

Lewis' statement on the automobile strike said:

"The armistice reached at Lansing is eminently satisfactory. It permits a sane consideration of the matters of controversy . . . Obviously, the ensuing negotiations must bring forth a collective bargaining agreement between both sides.

"The representatives of the workers in these conferences will insist upon formal recognition of the union as the exclusive bargaining agency for the industry. When General Motors accepts this formula it is reasonable that the other items of controversy will quickly respond to negotiation.

Called Successful.

"The strike has been effective and its success indicates the necessity of General Motors conforming to accept modern practices in labor relations."

The statement made public here on behalf of the company said the negotiations "are to be conducted frankly and without prejudice to anyone. . .

"In order to alleviate distress, the corporation proposes to resume operations on a reduced basis in plants not shut down as a result of these strikes. . .

"It is felt by the corporation that every opportunity should be taken to effect a fair settlement of the matter in dispute with the strikers as soon as possible."

The Labor Board's decision in the Seattle newspaper case held that Frank M. Lynch, photographer, and Philip Everhardt Armstrong, dramatic critic, had been discharged by the Post-Intelligencer "because of the leading part they took in founding and organizing the Seattle chapter of the American Newspaper Guild." The board ordered that both men be re-instated with adjusted back pay and that the paper "end all interference with its employes in the exercise of their rights to join labor organizations."

Pope Pius Delays Academy; Hopes To Attend Later

Vatican City, Jan. 15 (AP).—Still suffering considerable pain in his legs, Pope Pius today delayed convening of the new pontifical Academy of Science scheduled for next month.

The Holy Father, Vatican prelates said, hoped he might be sufficiently improved to permit his attendance later. Originally the academy was to have convened February 6. A new date was not set.

There was hope, too, the Pope might be able to celebrate mass in the chapel adjacent to his bedroom next Sunday—reciting the service from a reclining position before a special table.

HOLC to Defend Suit on Mortgage

Attorneys for the Home Owners Loan Corporation will present the corporation's side of the sale for mortgage of the home of the Misses Colt, in Chevy Chase, next week before Judge Thomas M. Anderson, examiner for the Montgomery County Circuit Court, at Rockville, Md.

Miss Katherine Gideon Colt testified Thursday that the HOLC had not kept its agreement that the mortgage was to run for three years without payments and had failed to make a reconditioning loan which had been promised and which was necessary in order that the sisters could earn income to pay off the debt.

The sisters are attempting to have the sale of the property set aside. The property is assessed at $19,066 while the mortgage was for $9,551 and the sale price at the forced sale was only $9,000.

It was inadvertently stated in The Post yesterday morning that the mortgage was for $19,066.

Doherty's Profit Seen $17,784,032

New York, Jan. 15 (AP).—Details of a re-selling transaction by which Henry L. Doherty, financier, reputedly made a $17,784,032 profit were recorded today as the first week of a suit brought by six stockholders of the Cities Service Co., a Doherty organization, ended in Federal Court.

P. E. Jackson, counsel for the plaintiffs, who charge Doherty with illegal control and misuse of the stockholders' money, contended the financier was obliged to resell the stock at cost. The securities were resold to one of Doherty's companies.

The records of the sale, sworn to by Ernest H. Jackson, a director and vice president of Cities Service, and one of the defendants, showed that 200,000 shares, which Doherty acquired for $13.26 a share, were sold to Cities Securities Corporation, a wholly owned subsidiary of Cities Service, for $102.50 a share.

Heavy Armament Slows New Ships

By the Associated Press.

The Navy clung yesterday in its design for two new battleships to a tradition of combat similar to the toe-to-toe slugging of some prize fighters.

Officials gave this tradition as the reason the ships will be slower than similar vessels being built by foreign nations. Speed will be sacrificed for more guns and armament.

Some navies strike quickly and withdraw from range frequently. American battleships have been built to wade in and trade shells with the enemy to the finish.

The two new $50,000,000 battleships may experiment with a design of four guns to each turret, Secretary Swanson disclosed.

Swanson said the new vessels will have a speed of 26 or 27 knots, which compares with the 19 to 21 knots of present American battleships and the 30-knot speed projected for some foreign ships.

Hospital Patient Finds Criminal

New York, Jan. 15 (AP).—Recognition of a wanted criminal, lying in the next bed in a New York hospital, brought a $100 reward today to Jacob Bastacky, 22, a heart-disease patient.

The check was donated by John Shuttleworth, editor of a detective story magazine.

Bastacky was reading the magazine last October 19, glancing over the section devoted to "wanted criminals," when he saw a photograph which he recognized as that of the man in the bed beside him.

That man was identified as Joseph P. Martin, 53, wanted on six forgery indictments.

U. S. Naval Guns Frighten Tokyo

Tokyo, Jan. 15 (AP).—Washington dispatches reporting the United States may arm its two new 35,000-ton battleships with 16-inch guns were given sensational prominence in Tokyo newspapers today.

The news was published under large headlines, supported by pictures of American superdreadnaughts with large guns superimposed, pointed menacingly westward across the Pacific.

Naval authorities interpreted the dispatches as indicating aggressive intentions on the part of the United States Navy.

The United States Navy has not yet announced what main armament the two new battleships to be laid down this year will carry, although it has been indicated authoritatively they will mount either nine 16-inch guns or 12 14-inch guns.

U. S. Licenses In Trade Urged By O'Mahoney

Senator Tells Engineers Consumption Places Production Rate.

Senator Joseph O'Mahoney, of Wyoming, told members of engineering societies meeting at the Hotel Mayflower last night that the only way for mass production to continue was to find a method to insure mass consumption.

Urging that all corporations doing business in interstate commerce be Federally licensed, O'Mahoney said that the most effective way to guarantee prosperity was to give "industry freedom under public authority." Minimum wages and maximum hours for labor, he declared, should be determined through exercising the principle of collective bargaining.

Dr. Charles F. Hirshfeld, vice president of the Detroit Edison Co., told the group, through a paper read by Dean Robert S. Sackett, of Pennsylvania State College Engineering School, that engineers should concern themselves with the social problems created through their technological advances. Dr. Hirshfeld was prevented by illness from attending the meeting.

Another speaker, Rear Admiral Harold G. Bohen, engineer in chief of the United States Navy, explained the engineer's part in national defense. Several hundred were present at the dinner, held under the auspices of the American Engineering Council and other engineering groups.

Farm Credit Bill Started in House

The House Agriculture Committee started a $50,000,000 farm crop production loan bill on its legislative road yesterday, but in doing so it called attention to the existence of overlapping agricultural credit agencies.

The bill, which would set up a permanent revolving fund for loans up to $400 annually to farmers unable to get credit elsewhere, was recommended for passage. Under expired loans laws, the maximum available was $200 per borrower.

Representative Jones (Democrat), Texas, chairman of the committee, pointed out at a hearing on the measure that two agencies—the Farm Credit Administration and the Resettlement Administration—were attempting to serve farmers unable to obtain private credit.

John F. Pahlke, U. S. A., died in Letterman General Hospital Wednesday, according to an announcement by the War Department yesterday.

Born in Germany in 1891, he began his military career as a private in the Coast Artillery Corps, rising to the rank of first lieutenant with the Philippine Scouts during the war. Toledo Gas Strike Begins at Midnight

Toledo, Ohio, Jan. 15 (AP).—Members of the Gas Employes' Union of Toledo tonight received orders to strike in the Ohio Fuel Gas Co., and Northwestern Ohio Natural Gas Co., plants here at midnight.

The order followed the union's rejection of a last-minute counter-proposal offered by the companies after several conferences.

Members of the strike committee agreed that a maximum of 24 out-of-town workers would be permitted to enter the plants to avert shut-off of the city's gas supply.

PALL MALL
THE MODERN BLEND
STRAIGHT TOBACCO FLAVOUR
They're Better... Naturally!
The Modern Blend of Pall Mall brings you the pleasing flavour of fine tobaccos—and nothing else. It uses no artificial flavouring or sweetening of any kind.
In its blending it observes, instead, the English tradition of the Turkish Pall Mall, long famous as "A Shilling in London, A Quarter Here."
The new Pall Mall is thus the only cigarette of its type which owes its flavour simply to a blend of the finest domestic tobaccos, enriched by aromatic Oriental varieties. It is fine tobacco, unadorned. Because it scorns the inexpensive short-cut of sugar-coating, common-sense tells you its tobaccos must be finer.
As a result, you get relief from the after-taste of artificial flavouring.

Italians Direct Malaga Drive; Moors in Van

Columns of Cavalry Push Leftist Forces Back on Besieged City.

By the United Press.

Gibraltar, Jan. 15.—Italian military experts tonight were reported directing a rebel drive along the Andalusian coast toward Malaga, Spain's second greatest seaport and loyalist stronghold.

Columns of Moorish cavalry, riding into the enemy with flashing curved blades, were said to have advanced along the ragged coast as far as the village of Guengirla.

Guengirla, surrounded by vineyards providing the world's finest muscatel wines, is only 15 miles from Malaga. On clear days the turrets of Gibralfaro, guardian castle of Malaga, can be seen from there.

Gen. Gonzalo Queipo de Llano, insurgent leader in the south who captured the port of Estepona, 25 miles northeast of Gibraltar, in a surprise offensive yesterday, was said to have sailed from Algeciras with the Italian staff officers.

The main columns of Gen. De Llano's army were camped on the outskirts of Marbella, 29 miles from their objective, but the flying squadrons of Moorish cavalry pressed swiftly toward the city which their ancestors lost to Christian invaders 450 years ago.

Generalissimo Francisco Franco's big effort to seize Malaga, badly battered after weeks of siege from land, sea and air, was believed here to have a direct connection with the conversations in Rome between Premier Mussolini and Gen. Goering, of Germany.

Madrid Faces New Attack.

Duce, Fuehrer Ready to Block Russian 'Plot'

80,000 Men to Be Rushed to Franco 'in Case,' Diplomats Say.

By the United Press.

Rome, Jan. 15.—Diplomats understood tonight that Italy and Germany are ready to throw thousands of fresh troops into Spain's rebel armies unless Soviet Russia abandons her alleged plot to communize Spain.

Rebel Gen. Francisco Franco has asked Berlin and Rome for 80,000 more troops to crush the loyalists. Germany and Italy were said to be ready to give him these—and more—if foreign aid to the Spanish government does not cease.

Their far-reaching plans were reported as Premier Mussolini conferred with his guest, Gen. Hermann Goering, Adolf Hitler's "No. 1 man," on the Spanish war.

They decided to assent "in principle" to Great Britain's proposal to ban the sending of foreign troops to Spain. But they count on the usual delays and diplomatic "red tape" to retard the agreement for some time. Meanwhile, it was said, they will bolster Franco's cause as never before in hope that the rebel leader can take Madrid before any international neutrality agreement becomes effective.

The two Fascist powers will specify that their agreement to the British suggestion will not become effective until it has been agreed to by all the powers.

Diplomats understand that Italy, even now, is rushing fresh troops to Spain. They said that 2,000 men sailed from Naples two nights ago, ostensibly for East Africa, but in reality for Spanish ports.

It was understood that before the Fascist powers send the 80,000 men for whom Franco has asked they will wait to see whether Britain will intercede with France—if not Russia—to block the establishment of a Communist headquarters in Spain, which they believe is the Comintern's design.

End of Motors Strike Menaced By Verbal Tilt

Lewis and Knudsen Clash on Bargaining; Parley Set for Today.

down" strikers scheduled for Sunday.

Possibility of more strikes as threatened by Germer.

Danger of violence should John Doe warrants charging kidnaping be served upon striker participants in last Monday's battle with police.

Lewis, pacing up and down in his office in Washingon and chewing a cigar, asserted that C. I. O. will "insist" that the United Automobile Workers be recognized as the "exclusive" bargaining agent of all the workers.

Knudsen smiled when newspapermen brought him that statement at a press conference in General Motors' offices late today.

"That's not my kind of collective bargaining," he said. "We don't believe in one exclusive bargaining agency representing all the men. Why should Lewis represent someone not a member of the union?"

While Knudsen was talking, Homer Martin, international president of the United Automobile Workers, who collaborated with Knudsen in a truce early today in Gov. Frank Murphy's office at Lansing, was explaining his view of the threatened conflict.

"The union's demand that it be recognized as sole collective bargaining agent of the workers is one of the questions to be discussed with General Motors officials beginning Monday."

Knudsen agreed with Martin that the agreement reached under Murphy's 15 hours of mediation at Lansing constituted "recognition" of the U. A. W. A.

It is unlikely, the G. M. C. executive said, that any plants will be reopened pending negotiations because of the almost complete stoppage of production.

"Sit-Downers" to Parade.

Martin announced that a vote will be taken on the action of union leaders at Lansing in each of the 17 G. M. C. plants affected by strikes and that at Anderson, Ind., Flint and Detroit, sit-downers will parade out behind bands and banners.

The schedule of evacuation was announced as follows:

Anderson, Ind.—Delco-Remy sit-downers will vote tomorrow and parade through the town behind the White Motor Band, of Cleveland.

Detroit—Cadillac and Fleetwood workers will march out tomorrow to a mass meeting at I. A. S. Hall.

Flint, Mich.—Martin will attend a mass meeting Sunday, and the Fisher Body plants 1 and 2 will be evacuated with ceremony.

There will be a rally of the entire union in Detroit at 2 p. m. Sunday.

Will Confer Tomrorow.

Martin, accompanied by John Brophy, director of C. I. O., and Wyndham Mortimer, union vice president, will confer with Knudsen at 10 a. m. tomorrow regarding Monday's opening of negotiations.

Knudsen said he would attend the bargaining conference with several General Motors officials as yet unselected. Gov. Murphy has made himself available if his persuasiveness is needed in the conference.

Glass Conference Set.

Pittsburgh, Jan. 15 (AP).—Arrangements were completed tonight for a conference here tomorrow between Labor Leader Philip Murray and officials of the Pittsburgh Plate Glass Co.

Observers predicted this may be the most important session since the Federation of Flat Glass Workers called a strike October 24, which made 6,000 workers idle and was followed by a similar walkout affecting 7,000 Libbey-Owens-Ford Glass Co. employes.

It was understood H. S. Wherrett, president of Pittsburgh Plate Glass, who has taken no part in earlier negotiations, will talk with Murray, one of John L. Lewis' chief lieutenants in the Committee for Industrial Organization.

End Differences, Catholic Bishop Asks Labor Heads

Cincinnati, Jan. 15 (AP).—Archbishop John T. McNicholas, head of the Cincinnati archdiocese of the Catholic Church which includes Detroit, called tonight upon labor to "demand of your leaders that they sink their differences" in order to retain industrial peace.

In the first statement by a member of the American hierarchy on the current strike situation, Archbishop McNicholas urged that leaders "find a remedy for structural weaknesses in the American Federation of Labor and re-establish the dignity of labor in the eyes of the Nation."

"There was real hope that prosperity would soon return, but if strikes continue to spread, sound economic recovery will certainly be retarded and perhaps prevented," he said.

"Public opinion is confused; the workers are bewildered and divided; leadership is at a stalemate . . .

"Labor must still fight for a larger share in profits," he concluded, "but the first step to be taken is to have peace in its own ranks."

illustrated so long ago in ancient Galilee, when our Lord, passing through a village, saw a group of men idling and he said to them, 'why stand you here idle?' and they replied, 'because no man has given us work.' "

Those who took part in an inspection tour of the new $11,000,000 mill and who later attended the dinner included Edward R. Stetinius, chairman of the U. S. Steel finance committee; former Vice President Charles G. Dawes, and other steel executives from New York, Chicago and Gary, Ind.

The construction program, to take place at the Clairton and Edgar Thomson works of the Carnegie-Illinois Steel Corporation, involves:

1. The construction at Clairton of hot strip and cold reduction mills of 600,000 tons yearly capacity and electrically operated throughout for production of sheet and tin plate. The largest unit will be an 80-inch hot mill.

2. The construction of a new slabbing mill at the Edgar Thomson Works, Braddock, Pa., of 1,000,000 tons a year capacity, chiefly to supply slab to feed the new Clairton mill.

3. The addition of extensive electric power producing facilities at Edgar Thomson and necessary transmission lines from Braddock to Clairton, where much of the new power will be consumed.

The contracts for the new program will be let in the near future.

It is expected that the work will require about 15 months to complete, indicating the new mills should be in operation in the late spring or early summer of 1938.

Wilhelmina Will Meet Juliana Near Innsbruck

The couple have been at Krynica, Poland, but it was understood they planned to go to Igls, near Innsbruck, Austria, to meet the Queen.

Juliana and Bernhard, it was announced, will attend the coronation of King George VI of Great Britain May 12. The crown princess will represent her mother, while the prince will attend as an unofficial guest, it was stated.

Wells With Beer, Champagne Cows Planned at Party

New York, Jan. 15 (AP).—Wells that yield beer, fake cows that give champagne, and a wide assortment of live livestock will blossom forth in one of New York's largest and plushiest hotels, the Waldorf-Astoria, tomorrow night as the latest coup d'etat of Elsa Maxwell, buxom party-thrower extraordinary.

The affair, officially entitled "The Barnyard Frolic," is being given in honor of Mrs. Laura Corrigan, London socialite, and Mrs. William R. Hearst, wife of the publisher.

Pulsating in response to the yodels of Tom Bevington, Ohio hog caller and guest star at the shindig, will be six genuine pigs, holding up their end of a miniature farm that will include two real cows, a pen of chickens, a pair of geese, a brace of goats, half a dozen sheep and a donkey.

The animals will be transported to the hotel's Jade Room on a freight elevator to avoid their being frightened by the guests in the lobby.

One source said special shoes would be made for the cows so they wouldn't scratch the floors.

The Commissioners.

Reappointment of Commissioners Hazen and Allen implies indorsement by the President of the policies they have carried out in the District during the last three and a half years. Both have persistently sought more liberal treatment of the District by Congress. So this renewed expression of confidence in their administration emphasizes the fact that the President has been studiously noncommittal on the subject of the Jacobs committee report.

Both Commissioners have made an earnest effort to extend the influence of District residents over the local government. Mr. Hazen has lived up to his announced policy of following the wishes of the people so far as they can be ascertained and so far as is now possible. The supplemental plan designed by Mr. Allen, to have local citizens express their opinions on major policies through referendums, is still pending consideration.

The same attitude has been reflected through their public hearings on the budget and numerous bills affecting the District. Washingtonians will be pleased to learn that this enlightened policy is to be continued, with the approval of the President. When many momentous local issues are pressing for solution it is some comfort to know that the Commissioners are sympathetic with the desires of the people, even though their powers are extremely limited.

Both Commissioners would doubtless be among the first to admit that the District's foremost problem is not one of personnel, but of authority to secure fiscal and administrative judgments. The tragedy is that the heads of the local government, who, along with the Engineer Commissioner, are in the best position to understand its needs and its handicaps, should be so deprived of influence in determining policies.

The McCarran Bill.

The McCarran bill, which seeks to raise the pay of all Federal employes receiving less than $3,600 a year, is more than a mere wage-increase measure. It also provides for an extension of the salary-classification system to cover the field services, with certain exceptions, and it calls for regular yearly increases in pay within each salary grade until the maximum rate is reached. Furthermore, the bill would abolish the mandatory uniform system of efficiency ratings in favor of a permissive system better adapted to the special needs of the different governmental agencies.

This attempt to improve methods of fixing salaries, and of rewarding faithful service, is certainly quite as important as the proposal to increase rates of pay. Indeed, by raising the morale of the service the efficiency aspects of the plan would to some extent offset the additional costs involved.

If the Government is to be a model employer it must pay enough to enable all its employes to maintain decent standards of living. Judged by those standards, the $1,500 compensation provided in the McCarran bill for the lowest-paid workers is certainly reasonable. The argument that the proposed increases would be a stimulus to trade and industry, which would help to absorb the unemployed is, however, far-fetched and irrelevant. Since the taxpayers of the country would have to defray the extra costs involved, stimulus gained in one direction would be offset in another.

As a matter of fact, it is doubtful whether the rates of pay suggested can be defended on strictly economic grounds, in view of the eagerness with which people enter the Government service at prevailing scales. This indicates that the Government is offering as much or more to low-paid clerical and manual workers as they could get for comparable work in private employment. It follows that if the Government undertakes to raise rates of pay without being compelled to do so by outside competition it is the more justified in demanding a relatively high degree of efficiency from its employes.

Unfortunately, a higher salary scale is not likely to improve the quality of the work done so long as a large proportion of Government employes are deprived of the protection of intelligent civil service rules and regulations. Increased pay may under existing conditions merely increase the attractiveness of many Government jobs in the eyes of party spoilsmen. The way to bring men and women of superior qualifications into the service is much the same in the unskilled grades as in the technical positions. An adequate scale of remuneration must in both cases be coupled with a merit system and that reasonable security of tenure which is impossible under patronage conditions.

A Dubious Panacea.

In his recent relief message to Congress President Roosevelt accused those employers who work their employes "unreasonably long hours" of obstructing re-employment of labor. Mr. Roosevelt made no attempt to define standards of reasonableness. But his disapproving references to the lengthening of the average working week, from 33.3 hours in September, 1934, to "more than 40 hours" last October, indicates that he views any increase in the working week as an unmitigated evil. That would be true only if there were validity in the argument that it is possible or would be advisable to parcel out a measurable amount of immediately available work in such a way as to give jobs to all.

The fallacies underlying this belief have been exposed by economists repeatedly, but without avail. As a temporary device for spreading work in periods of slack business, shorter working time is often an admirable device. As a cure for those economic maladjustments that cause large-scale and protracted unemployment such a program is unsound, however socially desirable it may appear. After working schedules have been put upon a basis allowing workers leisure for self-development and relieving them from protracted physical strain, any further curtailment of hours will threaten a corresponding reduction in existing output. If not this, there will at least be neutralization of the increased output that would otherwise be made possible by technological progress.

Decreased output of course means a decline in the volume of consumable goods that can be bought with a given amount of money. In other words, the worker will pay for his shorter day or week by a drop in the purchasing power of his dollars, even if his nominal earnings are not reduced. That is the inevitable consequence of any general lowering of the standard of living such as would follow arbitrary shortening of the working time of labor.

The Brookings Institution, in its current study of "The Recovery Problem in the United States," points out that if gains from national efficiency are to be realized only in the form of more leisure, the country will stand still economically. And to stand still now means that we must remain content with a per capita scale of production about 15 per cent below pre-depression standards. A production program that would make good arrears and provide for increases in population would, it is estimated, provide full-time employment for from eight to nine million workers during the next five years.

To state the position in these quantitative terms of course does not furnish an immediate practical answer to the question of how to find work for the millions actually idle at the present time. It should, however, warn us against making demonstrably false starts in our zeal to provide one sovereign remedy for unemployment.

The additions to production costs necessitated by curtailing hours of work without corresponding cuts in pay also have to be considered. Unquestionably wage costs may be raised in some industries without any restriction of output or loss of employment. On any universal scale, however, such a program is likely to result in curtailment of production, enforced economy in use of labor and additions to sales prices of produced goods. All such developments would injure labor, by bringing about dismissals and raising living costs for those employed.

The theory that high wages and reduced hours of labor will automatically increase prosperity and create employment was tried out under the NRA with the result of retarding recovery in many industries. Perhaps that explains why Gen. Johnson is at present so annoyed by the Brookings findings. None the less, to the unprejudiced it will continue to be common sense to say that the more we have, the better off we are; that the less we produce, the poorer we become.

Those who preach arbitrary reduction of working time as the cure-all for economic ills cannot afford to forget that "wages as well as interest and profits depend upon production."

Washington Theater.

"Steve" Cochran, identified with the Washington stage since he was a program boy, has resigned his post of the last 15 years as manager of the National Theater. The National's loss, however, may well prove Washington's gain. For Mr. Cochran plans now to devote his full time to his dramatic school, principal feeder for the stock companies which for several summers have so successfully entertained the city.

As the widespread interest created by the new Civic Theater attests, Washington will welcome any well-planned increase in dramatic activity, whether amateur or professional. The habitual crowds at the city's one legitimate theater testify amply to the interest here. And the recent appearance of ticket scalpers indicates that there is plenty of money to support this interest. The combination of these two factors should have developed more competition before this. Perhaps a greater emphasis on summer stock performances would result eventually in more and better year-around theater for Washington.

Last year there was talk of a movement to promote a "national" theater here to serve the entire country along the lines found as successful in many European cities. Whether or not the proposal would prove practical is not certain, for New York is already the Mecca of American actors. But the mere fact of its suggestion adds to the argument that Washington could be and should be a better theater town.

Reciprocal Reports.

The impression seems to be abroad that there is some fundamental irreconcilability between the recommendations of the Brownlow committee and those of the Byrd committee, appointed by the Senate to investigate the Government's executive agencies. This suggestion of conflict has probably been conveyed by Senator Byrd's sharp criticism of the Brownlow report, and his insistence that economy should be the chief aim of a reorganization plan. President Roosevelt, on the other hand, has been disposed to minimize the savings resulting from reorganization of the executive establishment, and has stressed the importance of increasing functional efficiency.

Examination of the Brownlow report and the initial installment of the Byrd report, prepared by the Brookings Institution, confirms the expectation that these separate investigations would be complementary, not conflicting.

The former contains certain sweeping recommendations for reforming the executive services in accordance with a preconcieved view of the proper division of legislative, judicial and executive functions. One may disagree with the political philosophy advanced in justification of plans for aggrandizing the executive establishment at the expense of the legislative and judicial branches of Government. One may wish that the Brownlow committee had offered more specific suggestions for saving money by combining or eliminating certain services. But by confining itself largely to a general plan of action, the President's committee has left the field of specific economies open for the Byrd committee.

The report on governmental financial agencies now submitted to the latter committee by the Brookings Institution carefully avoids any policy-making recommendations that would go beyond the terms of its reference. Thus, when offering a plan for economical liquidation of the RFC and other temporary Federal lending agencies, the report takes no stand as regards the desirability of prolonging their active life. Senator Byrd's futile one-man fight against a two-and-one-half-year extension of the lending activities of the RFC, buttressed by citations from the Brookings report, tends to give a wrong impression of the character of that report.

While it is virtually impossible to make recommendations for combining or discontinuing Government services or agencies without impliedly passing judgment upon their value, the first installment of the Brookings report is admirably objective and scientific, both in method and manner of presentation. If its subsequent material is of the same type, the Byrd committee should be able to do a great deal of effective detail work without in any way trenching upon the field reserved to the President's committee.

Great savings can be achieved by elimination of duplicate and overlapping governmental agencies with or without far-reaching changes in the present governmental set-up. Economy and efficiency in government go hand in hand. If the President can devise a plan for making the Government function more efficiently, the Senate will be aided rather than hindered in formulating plans for enabling the Government to function more economically.

No Accounting For Tastes.

"The wild vicissitudes of taste," of which Samuel Johnson once spoke, still applies to theater audiences and critics. Last year the New York film critics were hunting new adjectives to describe "The Informer's" grimness. This year finds them strutting their superlatives in praise of the lightheartedness of "Mr. Deeds Goes to Town." Yet Gypo and Mr. Deeds apparently have nothing at all in common save their sheer ability to make one forget routine for a couple of hours.

The "sticks" which, according to New Yorkers, compose all other towns and cities, cast their 1936 votes in favor of "Mutiny on the Bounty." Capt. Bligh is a far cry from "David Copperfield," their 1935 choice. Dickens' classfe is, in turn, entirely remote from the romantic story of Elizabeth Barrett Browning, which led the field in 1934. Out in the cold appear to be musical extravaganzas, bright and brittle pictures of young moderns, and "Westerns," though the latter got a break in 1931 with "Cimarron."

A glance at the list of "best pictures," picked during the last eight years by an annual canvass of 500 critics and movie editors throughout the country, reveals a crazy-quilt of tastes. Two of the favorites dealt with the subject of war; five were based on less thunderous historical episodes; four were derived from recent best sellers, and one from a classic. Where, oh where, is the much-touted American sense of humor? Not once in these eight years has a comedy, like the name of Abou Ben Adhem, led all the rest.

A report from hell is to the effect that an increasingly large number of people are arriving there daily at 70 miles an hour.

Mr. Bernard Of Minnesota.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: Mr. Maurice R. Pleasants asks in the columns of The Post about "Mr. Bernard's vote." He writes: "Who is this Republican, John T. Bernard, newly-elected Farmer-Laborite?"

Obviously, Congressman Bernard cannot be both Republican and Farm-Laborite. He is not a Republican. He is a Farmer-Laborite. Although the Republican nominee for Congress in the Eighth Minnesota district, William A. Pittenger, native of Crawfordsville, Ind. (Gen. Lew Wallace's community) and graduate of Harvard Law, and Wabash College, ran about 2 to 1 ahead of his ticket November 3, the combined Farmer-Labor and New Deal (Democratic?) vote of the district elected Bernard by a plurality of five figures.

Mr. Pleasants may be interested in how that came about—through a combine of New Deal and Farmer-Labor parties. The facts: United States Senator Benson, nominee of the Farmer-Labor Party for Governor, arrived in Washington about a month before election and informed the New Deal strategists that if the latter expected Farmer-Labor support in a major way for the New Deal Presidential ticket, the Democratic nominees for Governor and United States Senator and Congressman in the Eighth District, must be withdrawn, "or else." It is in the record of the campaign by telegrams from President Roosevelt and Postmaster General Farley (made public and printed in the public press) that this was effected and the two in question duly thanked the New Deal nominees so withdrawn from the ticket for their "service" to the New Deal Party. The public is at liberty to draw its own conclusions as to the consideration.

The Eighth District of Minnesota is normally Republican on Congress. Clarence B. Miller, running for a sixth term in 1918, was defeated by a locomotive engineer of Proctor, William L. Carss, labeled as an "Independent," and also having the united support of the Democratic Party. William G. McAdoo journeyed to Minnesota in the interests of Carss—not so much because of any special interest in Carss but in order to help defeat Miller who had greatly offended the Wilson Administration in the House. Carss, running again in 1920 and in 1922, against Oscar J. Larson, Republican, was defeated. In 1924, Carss again ran and won; in 1926 he ran again and won. In 1928 again he ran, and was defeated by Pittenger. In 1930 Pittenger was re-elected. In 1932, because of defect of the re-apportionment law, Pittenger was compelled to run at large, and was unable to make the grade, although carrying the territory of the Eighth District overwhelmingly.

In 1934, he again was the Republican nominee and was elected. Although causing some $9,000,000 to be paid those who suffered losses through the great forest fires of October, 1918, nevertheless, the Farmer-Labor-New Deal fusion of 1936 was too great a handicap and the Roosevelt-Farley-Benson choice, John T. Bernard, was elected, and his very first vote, at which Mr. Pleasants naturally takes umbrage, was cast against the New Deal Party and the Administration that had made possible his membership in the House.

Would it not be more in keeping with the facts for Mr. Pleasants to charge up to President Roosevelt the presence of Mr. Bernard in Washington, J. W. NAGLE.

The President's Attitude.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: It will now be interesting to note the "team work" between John Lewis and Mr. Roosevelt in disposing of the industrial strike situation in the automotive industry.

Mr. Roosevelt's attitude toward the Supreme Court, if not checked, will have a very demoralizing effect upon this country, socially and financially. The 16,000,000 opposed to his election in November will have to be alert during the next four years.

Expensive Parties.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: I have been interested in the discussion aroused by Mr. Pegler's criticism of $50,000 parties.

The stock defense of these wasteful and selfish displays of great wealth has once more been adduced, namely, that they "give employment" to labor.

There are several fallacies in this reasoning.

It is not alone work that the laboring classes need, but more of the fruits of labor. And it is the toilers that in fact do the "giving," not their employers. The latter enjoy the comforts and luxuries that labor creates, paying back to the workers in wages and salaries too little to enable them to enjoy the products of their own skill and industry.

Another fallacy in the effort to justify these selfish and lavish expenditures of the rich upon their own pleasures is that the element of great waste is ignored. The power of the rich—as of all—to consume being necessarily limited, they destroy and waste the excess that they cannot enjoy.

It is true that with the present maldistribution of wealth these appalling manifestations of egoism and wastefulness are inevitable. Until wealth is more equitably shared the rich will continue to throw fine food into their garbage pails while the poor tighten their belts or go hungry.

But I think we shall never have any civilization worthy of the name until as individuals we shall be ashamed of having too much instead of having too little.

Federal Real Estate Here.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: In the discussion of the fiscal relations between the Government and the District, I think that more emphasis should be given to the relative value of Government-owned and privately-owned real estate. The Government is constantly taking over more and more taxable real estate and turning it into nontaxable property.

Within my recollection the land on which the Senate and House office buildings, the Congressional Library building, many squares east and west of the Capitol now turned into park additions to the Capitol Park, the great "triangle" and much land west of Seventeenth street, now occupied by Government buildings, were occupied by privately-owned and consequently taxable buildings.

If the Government-owned property of the District was assessed at its value I think that it would be found that the Government owned fully 40 per cent of the real estate in the District and should therefore, in all fairness, make a 40 per cent contribution to the expenses of running the District, including police and fire protection, street paving, etc. The niggardly sum now proposed as the Government's contribution to the District expenses is out of all reason.

Higher Bracket Pay.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: The great weakness in the higher branches of the Federal service is the mistaken belief that they, too, can be made efficient by dividing them into divisions or sections and putting a capable, well-paid man or woman at the head of each.

We all know that the very greatest and highest-paid football coaches and baseball managers in the country are unable to turn out championship teams without fine material. Yet the Government expects a division or section chief in the upper branches of its service to develop a highly efficient division or section without thoroughly capable and intellectual material in that division or section.

Why not pay all the men and women in the higher branches attractive salaries and give the division and section chiefs some really capable material to work with?

Two Views On Civil Service Reform.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: The article by Agnes E. Meyer which appeared in The Post of January 10 was a fine piece of newspaper reporting. Both shortcomings and suggestions for improvement in the administration of Federal personnel are appraised without political bias, and every Government employe would do well to read Mrs. Meyer's analysis of our civil service.

Due to the urgency for speedily setting up the many Governmental agencies created during President Roosevelt's first term, the personnel to man them had to be selected without regard to the laws regulating the civil service. Notwithstanding what has been said to the contrary, in my estimation the administrators have handled this job with proper regard for the qualifications of the appointees wherever possible.

The time has now come to place the employes of the permanent and semi-permanent agencies on a basis of equality with the older establishments. The Congress should meet this situation by strengthening the arm of the Civil Service Commission. PRO BONO PUBLICO.
Washington, Jan. 11.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: I read with the greatest enjoyment the article in The Post of the Civil Service. Obviously Mrs. Meyer has never worked within the walls of an agency under the control of "the service," so to her, it is just one grand merit system. But ask someone who really knows the insidedness of an agency and the other side of the picture might come to life.

I am not writing this against the commission, because that body does not really know how positions are really filled and promotions granted. It merely formulates the good principles, but the rest of the work takes place at the bureau which does the hiring, and in cases where there has been a flagrant abuse it must raise its objection.

It gives me a good laugh to hear the objection to the spoils system. Who said that there was none of this in the civil service? Such a belief is absurd to the people who know what takes place. I have spent a decade almost in the "service," am not dissatisfied, because I have been fortunate enough to get my "share" and have seen many many "mental cripples" take a lead above people with good education and ability. At least the spoils system is open and favoritism is open to public criticism thereby, but the Civil Service is closed in this respect.

A word about the personnel officers; one has pity for them in the Civil Service. A good farm-horse buyer usually has more education, experience, and sense of selection than many of them have when it comes to the question of placing people in suitable places. Most of the superiors are afraid of bright men (speaking of the lower brackets) for fear of a "showdown" at some time or other and here is just what happens to these people: They are hoping that someone will die or get promoted; they hope for a transfer; get into a "rut" and look forward to retirement, or some miracle to happen. My opinion is that as things now stand, the quickest way for a person to get ahead in the Government service, as the possessor of fine bright qualities, is through the "spoils agencies" which are not so bad as "jealousy and inferiority" pictures them.

Brick House.

IN St. Marys County there are several very old houses built of brick, but when a St. Marys countian speaks of the Brick House, he usually means the house that stands on what was once known as St. Richard's Manor, a 1,000-acre tract in the Mattapany Hundred, lying between the river and the path, and between St. Lawrence's Creek and St. Vincent's Creek, and adjoining Mattapany, the home of the Widow Sewall, and later (after she had married the Proprietary, the friend of her late husband), the home of Charles, third Lord Baltimore.

The description is the old one. The river is, of course, the Patuxent; the path, the Indian trail which is now the Three-Notch road, then as now the county's watershed between the Potomac and Patuxent, but the creeks have lost their old name, and their identity is obscure, and the Brick House property, no longer a close neighbor of Mattapany, has dwindled to some 240 acres.

* * * *

Some day of these days a complete and authoritative story will be written about the Brick House. Beyond question its history, at the moment a little clouded, has been an interesting one. (Bullets have been found in its beams!) Researches being made by its present owners, Mr. and Mrs. Maynard Barnes, of Washington, have not been as successful as one could hope. Many of the official papers have been lost; some when St. Marys City ceased to be the capital of Maryland and the books were carried in wagons drawn by oxen and mules over the Three-Notch road and on to Annapolis, and some when St. Marys City had long ceased to be the county seat and the courthouse in Leonardtown burned down.

Much of what has been learned has come from unexpected sources, and this, at least, gives a fillip to the search. Also, it must be confessed, a paucity of facts permits a wealth of interesting surmises.

It is known that in 1639 Richard Garnett or Richard Gardner applied for, and in 1640 received a grant of 1,000 acres, henceforth known as St. Richard's Manor. Both names are used at different times in connection with the grant. One of them may have been simply a clerical error.

One has to guess at his original status in the colony. Did he come as adventurer (one who had invested money in Calvert's enterprise) or as servitor (one whose passage was paid by another and who, because of this indebtedness, was required to give service for a stated period, usually five years)?

The "Conditions of Plantation" formulated by Cecil Calvert, second Lord Baltimore, provided that a first settler or early immigrant who brought over not less than five persons was entitled to a grant of 2,000 acres. With less than five persons he was entitled to receive 200 acres for each person over 16 years of age (including himself and wife) and 50 acres for each of all persons under 16. Servitors having finished the term of their indenture became freemen with a right to 200 acres and additional rights in accordance with the size of their households. Garnett easily fits into either of the last two cases.

* * * *

A "writ of summons" to the election of burgesses for the Assembly issued by Leonard Calvert in February, 1639, begins, "Cecilius, lord proprietary, etc., to our trusty Richard Garnett, senior, Richard Lusthead, Anum Benum, Henry Bishop, Joseph Edlo, Lewis Freeman and other freemen inhabitant at Mattapanient, greeting——"

And the year before, on January 31, 1638, we find our friend on the coroner's jury inquiring into the death of John Bryant, a planter at Mattapanient. And this is an interesting sidelight on its own account; for it puts into effect the old English law of deodands, or forfeiture to God, through the king or his representative, of any chattel, animate or inanimate, which causes the death of a human being. John Bryant was killed by the fall of a tree; therefore, the jury found, the tree was "forfeited to the Lord Proprietor."

Richard Garnett then, before he was a landed proprietor in his own right, was a freeman of Mattapanient. And he built him a manor house. That the Brick House is that manor house has not as yet been definitely proved, but everything points in that direction.

* * * *

And the Brick House is old; old! Mr. Barnes (who dreams of the old house when he is in Europe, and when at home spends as much time in it as his duties in Washington will permit) has been making improvements, or, rather, restoring old beauties.

But, indeed, this is only a little of what might be written about the Brick House. Poets could tell you of its restfulness and charm; architects of its contours, lines and style, and bricklayers could tell you something, too; not only of its diverse styles of laying brick, but of that old, old story (told of a score of buildings in Maryland and Virginia and some few in Pennsylvania, including the Morris house in Philadelphia) of the bricks being brought over as ballast in ships from England. As though the ships headed this way needed ballast!

That's another good thing about the Brick House. It is not only Old American; it is All American!

Idea for Young Writers.

ONE OF THE hardships of writing as a career is that the new writer, unlike the new prize fighter, always feels bound to start with an unknown name, usually his own, although a few invent pen names which nevertheless are new and possess no prestige at the beginning. Pugilists have neither excessive modesty nor ethical compunction in this matter. On the contrary, they have magnificent self-esteem and do not doubt that they do honor to the proud names which they adopt. It must be said, too, that this confidence often has been justified by practical performance. This leads me to believe that they may also have been inspired by the glory of the originals and to wonder whether a new poet toiling under the name of Smith might do better as Young Homer.

Jim Corbett, the original, was followed by a total stranger, a featherweight, calling himself Young Corbett, while Jim was still current and engaged in elevating a corner of the drama. Young Corbett, be it admitted, brought no professional discredit to the proud name of Corbett, for he knocked out Terry McGovern—a feat comparable, pound for pound, with "Gentleman Jim's" dispatch of John L. Sullivan.

• • • •

ON THE SOCIAL side of things Young Corbett was less faithful to his model, and it may be that Jim sometimes permitted himself a secret wish that his namesake had used his own name in private life. Young Corbett, in turn, was succeeded by a welterweight within the last few years who solved an awkward problem rather neatly by calling himself not Young Corbett but Young Corbett II. I believe he, too, won the championship of his class, adding luster to the name, but I have no data on his social life and no idea whether he meant his private conduct as a tribute to Jim Corbett or Young Corbett the First.

Jack Dempsey, the old "Nonpariel," a middleweight, who sleeps in a lonely grave out West, of which a poet wrote a sad description some years ago, lost nothing by the fact that William Harrison Dempsey called himself Jack. First, however, Barney Dempsey, a brother of William Harrison, undertook to emulate the greatness of the "Nonpariel" and, finding himself unworthy, retired in favor of the man who is now one of the leading citizens of the United States.

There have been two Sharkeys since Tom—both calling themselves Jack, however, which may have been a touch of modesty on their part indicating that they hoped to resemble but did not expect to equal him. The first Jack Sharkey, an Italian bantamweight, barely failed to win the championship and, from the standpoint of professional merit, was much more worthy than the next one, who did win the heavyweight title. The bantamweight Jack Sharkey fought with great abandon, made $300,000, disposed of it with equal abandon and had vanished by the time Josef Paul Cuckoschav, the heavyweight, of Lithuanian descent, adopted the surname of the Irish sailor. Nevertheless, the heavyweight Jack Sharkey did win the heavyweight championship, whatever his virtue as a fighter, and the name appeared for the first time in the list of titleholders, for the old original, in a time of harder competition, never quite got up there.

We had a middleweight once who called himself Italian Joe Gans, but this seems to have been an unfortunate selection on his part, for he was not the type in any sense.

• • • •

I DO NOT know whether young writers would be inspired by great names, but in the gymnasiums where young fighters train there are always new Dempseys and Leonards, and I wonder if any students in the classroom ever sign their essays boldly "By Irish Anatole France" or "By Young Katharine Brush." Maybe, in the latter case, the original Katharine Brush would miss the compliment entirely, for there would be in that just the faintest suggestion of a marked difference in age. A certain tribute might be honestly intended, and yet I cannot imagine Miss Brush entirely pleased to be forced into the status of Old Katharine Brush even through the admiration of an aspirant, however sincere.

Then, too, with night life what it is nowadays and with new authors, at the first hint of success, spending their evenings in saloons in order to be presented as celebrities by the master of ceremonies, a lady of established reputation and modest behavior might be embarrassed to have it said that an upstart of the same name had thrown a bottle through a mirror the other night. If a writer named Hemingway were pinched for fighting in a New York pub fairness would demand a footnote explaining that Ernest Hemingway was in Key West, fishing, and that the prisoner was Kid Hemingway, a preliminary writer.

But I insist on my original thought that if fighters find it helpful and a short cut to fame to adopt great names young authors may have overlooked a golden chance in the library. Of course, it might make them self-conscious. I was once invited to ghost some copy under the name of Maurice Maeterlinck and, unlike Young Corbett and Young Corbett II, felt hopelessly overmatched.

The Once Over

By H. I. Phillips

I.

What does Mr. Wijjams get?
What's his salary per year?
Try to get the gross and net—
Every penny, do you hear?
What's his job and what's he do?
Is he in the higher dough?
Shoot the stirring details through!—
We must let the public know.

II.

What is Pofford's salary?
Get it to the one last dime!
If it's big (to you and me)
It must constitute a crime;
What's the title he enjoys?
In the profits does he share?
Give the details to the boys—
Nothing is his own affair!

Tell the folks his weekly pay!
Make it public through the press!
How much does that make per day?
How it burns those getting less!
Does he get a bonus, and
Is there any outside fee?

Crisis In Japan

Forces Of Liberalism And Democracy Seen Facing Militarist Reaction Modeled After Hitler's Fascism In Germany.

By Frank H. Hedges.

Special Correspondence of The Post.

Tokyo.

FOR MORE THAN five years past, or ever since the inauguration of its aggressive continental policy, Japan has been fond of telling itself that it faced a year of crisis—and then a genuine crisis would fail to materalize. The crisis is truly upon the empire today, and it means a struggle of major proportions to meet and overcome it. That struggle is fundamentally between the forces of liberalism and democracy versus the forces of reactionarianism, militarism and a Japanese version of fascism. On its outcome will depend the future of the nation, both internally and in the realm of foreign affairs.

The signing of the German-Japanese anti-Comintern agreement precipitated this crisis. For five years democracy, as represented principally by the political partics, had been quiescent in the face of an overwhelming arrogance and dominance on the part of the military. The parties unquestionably stood discredited with the people of the Nation. The graft and corruption with which they were riddled had been revealed, and their incompetence disclosed. They had failed to give the people and the nation what they wanted.

The military stepped in and by the single explosion at Mukden near midnight of September 18, 1931, reversed the entire situation and became masters of the country under the throne. The people were fired with an ardor almost like that of wartime. The army held out most attractive lures to them. They promised that in Manchuria Japan would find its promised land. Manchuria would afford relief for the pressing problem of overpopulation. Manchuria would supply Japan with the raw materials it so sorely needs but lacks itself. Manchuria would make of the Japanese empire the greatest nation on the face of the earth, able to harness China to its will, able to defy Soviet Russia, Great Britain, even the United States with impunity.

Besides, the army preached the intoxicating doctrine of a return to the glories of the past, and warned the people that the safety of the nation was at stake and only the army could rescue it. The people heard and believed, and there lies the explanation of Japanese policy since September 18, 1931.

People Awakening To Failure Of Army.

BUT THE ARMY has also failed the people and they are awake to that fact. Manchuria has been neither gold mine nor a practical field for colonization. Soviet Russia would almost certainly defeat Japan if war were waged at this moment. The cost of supporting the army has grown greater each year, and the people of Japan have had to meet this cost. Moreover, the February military revolt revealed that the idolized army had feet of clay. The people began, but only began to turn their faces again toward the political parties to lead them from their difficult position.

Then came the pact with Germany. It was the army's master stroke to regain control, or rather, to retain permanently the control which it has not yet lost. It hoped to frighten the U. S. S. R. and it hoped to erect in Japan a military autocracy with as firm a grip on political, economic and all other affairs as has Hitler in Berlin, Mussolini in Italy.

The political parties and all other liberal elements in the empire realized that no longer could they pursue a passive course, that they must wage battle to the death against the extremist element in military and bureaucratic circles if they were not themselves to be strangled to death in their sleep. And so the gage of battle has been taken up.

The reconvening of the seventieth session of the Diet for business on January 21 will mark the first major open engagement in this pro-Fascist versus anti-Fascist fight, unless the Hirota government may have fallen in the meanwhile. Both major parties, the Minseito and Seiyukai, have healed all differences and present a united front. The proletariat Party (Shakai Taishuto) is firmly behind them. So are all other major political groups in the Diet, so are the independent M. P.s. Capital is backing the movement, for its own life is threatened.

The military-bureaucracy, on the other hand, is far from united. The extremists would Hitlerize their nation; the moderate hesitate to go so far. Some men who are bureaucrats by career but not by conviction or inclination are openly in the ranks of the parties.

German Agreement Due For Attack As Diet Opens.

WHEN THE DIET opens, fearless and violent attacks will be made on the German-Japanese agreement and the sorry pass into which it has plunged Japan's international relationships. Soviet Russia is more greatly alienated than ever. China is more adamant in it opposition to Japanese encroachments than at any time since Japan defeated that nation in the war of 1894-95. Great Britain is gaining economic ground in China and against Japanese commerce elsewhere. France is as one with Britain. The United States, with no major issue impending, is not an active participant, but every Japanese knows where American sympathies lie.

The party leaders will attack not only the foreign policy of the present government, but much of its domestic program, particularly in the economic and financial field. A budget of more than 3,000,000,000 yen (necessitated largely by increased military and naval expenditures) carries with it an increased tax program, an enormous bond issue and raises in the prices of such government monopolies as tobacco in all its forms. That budget as it stands is unacceptable to the political parties. It is unacceptable to the people.

A plan has been drafted for the semi-nationalization of electric power that amounts to confiscation and that is the first step directly toward state socialism. The Minister of War, acting through Minister of Finance, would create an economic general staff giving him complete control of the industry and business of the empire and the dictation of how virtually every penny in Japan shall be invested. Private capital, with all the power of its wealth, will oppose these measures to the last ditch, for to yield means the end of the capitalistic system in Japan as it now exists. The parties will fight them bitterly.

The third front on this nationwide battlefield of democracy against military autocracy is in that of governmental organization. The army would create a policy-forming super-cabinet composed of its own henchmen, reducing the present cabinet to an administrative organ. It would rob the Diet of all of its real power. It would make party men ineligible to hold government posts. The Diet, the parties, the capitalists and the people at large will not accept this unless by force majeur.

Liberals Favored In Guess At Outcome.

HOW COULD this seem other than a year of crisis and of struggle to the nation and the people of Japan? Prophecy is too dangerous to attempt, but the odds are with the liberals despite the fact that the militarists are still in control.

How soon the issue may be settled is unknown. If the pressure becomes too great the army may force the dissolution of the Diet and the calling of a general election, which it would hope to win as Hitler wins in Germany. Or it might follow the example of Mussolini's march on Rome. Or it might very well yield to the unquestioned demand of the people if it were convinced that such a course was best for the nation.

It would yield because the Japanese army is not in love with power for power's sake. It genuinely and sincerely believes that its course is the best for the empire, but if convinced to the contrary it would be the first to alter that course, for the Japanese army is an army of patriots, of worshipers of their fatherland and their sovereign.

At times events move with lightning-like rapidity in eastern Asia; at times with the slowness by which the East is always characterized in the West. Which it is to be this time only the times themselves will reveal. But certain it is that before another year has come the world will be confronted with a very different Japan from that which exists today. It will be either a Fascist, military, conquest-dreaming empire, or it will be a nation that has once more returned to the fold of the United States and the other great democratic nations of the western world.

Goering's Visit

By Barnet Nover

Zigzag Diplomacy.

FOR A PROPER evaluation of the significance of Gen. Hermann Goering's present visit to Rome it is necessary to recall the curious sequence of events preceding it.

At Berchtesgaden, last October, Count Ciano, Mussolini's foreign minister and son-in-law, saw Chancellor Hitler and concluded with him a six-point agreement establishing the basis of Italo-German co-operation in European affairs generally and the Spanish problem in particular. That accord followed many weeks of joint activity by the Fascist nations on behalf of Gen. Francisco Franco and came at what then seemed the penultimate stage in the Spanish civil war.

Franco had reached the gates of Madrid and while he was being held up by stout loyalist resistance his ultimate victory seemed assured. The Italo-German agreement also followed a prolonged period of strained relations between each of the Fascist nations and the two great democracies of Western Europe.

These tensions arose in the one case out of Germany's unwillingness to provide an effective substitute for the Locarno pact which the Third Reich had smashed to bits by militarizing the Rhineland. In the other instance it was the equal to the sanctions imposed by the League against Italy.

Although these sanctions had been lifted after the capture of Addis Ababa by Italian troops, the League at its June meeting refused to wipe the slate clean so far as Italy was concerned. With the approval, reluctant though it was, of France and Great Britain the Council recognized the representatives of Haile Selassie as the spokesman of Ethiopia, in Italy's opinion a nonexistent state.

• • • •

IT WAS TO no small extent, therefore, the lack of harmony in the relations of the Fascist powers with France and Great Britain that paved the way for the establishment of an Italo-German bloc. But it was clear at the time and became even more clear later that the Fascist accord was no love match, only a tentative and uncertain marriage of convenience. Even on that basis its continuance depended on the acquiescence or at least the indifference of Great Britain.

Thus it was that in his Milan speech, on November 1, Mussolini, while lauding the Ciano-Hitler agreement, held out the olive branch to London. In due course his peace offering was accepted by the London government and the close of the year saw the conclusion of an Anglo-Italian agreement concerning the Mediterranean. In the meantime, despite the continued support given Franco by the Fascist powers and their recognition of the Burgos regime as the legal government of Spain, Madrid did not fall.

• • • •

THE ANGLO-ITALIAN agreement bound the signatories to respect Spain's territorial integrity and the status quo in the Mediterranean. Apparently it did not bind Italy to cease giving aid to France.

Why such a provision was omitted is not clear. Perhaps the British government, faced by Mussolini's unwillingness to abandon its activities in Spain yet eager to get the agreement signed, agreed to omit from the pact all references to nonintervention. Perhaps, as some have suggested, the British government was at the time indifferent whether the loyalists or the rebels won in Spain and were even secretly partial to Franco.

In any case, the Anglo-Italian agreement was quickly followed by the dispatch to Spain of new detachments of Italian "volunteers."

Thus while the Duce had, in the Mediterranean agreement, made a gesture of amity in the direction of Great Britain, his next step was one designed to appease Germany. But, having done that, the Rome government, at the time of the recent Moroccan crisis, let it be known that Italy would oppose German domination of Spain or seizure of any Spanish territory in Africa as it would equally oppose Russian dominance of the Spanish peninsula.

First zig, then zag. Obviously the logical next move for the Duce to make is once again to smile sweetly in Hitler's direction and the one after that to pat Great Britain on the back.

• • • •

THE INDICATIONS are thta this is exactly what Italy now plans to do. It is reported from Rome that as a result of Goering's conversations with Mussolini and Ciano aid to Franco is now to be redoubled so that he can take Madrid and complete his work of conquering Spain.

Having provided that aid, Italy and Germany will then come out wholeheartedly in favor of isolating the Spanish war by implementing the very nonintervention agreement they have so cynically flouted week after week. Great Britain can then put pressure on its democratic partner, France, to put into effect the measure now introduced in the Chamber of Deputies to bar volunteers to Spain.

It happens that Hitler and Mussolini made a serious miscalculation last November when they recognized Franco on the eve of what they believed to be his capture of Madrid.

They may once again be overestimating the rebel capacity to wage an offensive against the loyalists and the Russian-flavored loyalists' capacity to fight back the attacks of Spanish-flavored Moorish-Italian-German forces. Perhaps they also miscalculate either British stupidity or British indifference to what is going on in Spain. Now that Franco has practically seized the Rio Tinto mines the conservative elements dominating British policy may decide that it does make a difference to Great Britain who wins in the civil war.

But there is no assurance of that. London is befogged; hence Mussolini may be able to continue his zigzag course with perfect impunity, sure that Germany cannot afford to lose his friendship, such as it may be, and that Great Britain is in no mood to call his successive bluffs.

Pushkin

By William Lyons Phelps.

His Works.

This year of grace 1937 is the centenary of the great Alexander Pushkin, the founder of Russian modern literature both in poetry, where he is pre-eminent, and in prose, where he showed genius in the art of fiction.

He was born in 1799 and was killed in a duel in 1837. The man who killed him survived until 1895, which brings the beginning of modern Russian literature surprisingly close to our own day, when we think what might have happened. For Pushkin was not only a pioneer, he still remains——in the opinion of native critics—Russia's greatest poet, and by far her most beloved man of letters. At the dedication of his statue in Moscow in 1881, all Europe did homage. Turgenev and Dostoevski made speeches, and today there is no world-figure in literature more sure of immortality.

Well, the book we have been waiting for has just appeared, and I advise all my readers to buy a copy immediately, and begin to read it, so that we in America may help to celebrate the centennial year.

This is a handy, convenient, attractive volume, which is a triumph of the publishers. It can be carried in the pocket, being neither big nor heavy; but it contains almost 900 pages, is printed in large type on good paper. The title page reads "The Works of Alexander Pushkin." Lyrics, narrative poems, folk tales, plays, prose. Selected and edited with an introduction by Avrahm Yamolinsky.

• • • •

Thus the American reader has in one volume enough of the works of Pushkin, in their beauty and variety, to give him an adequate conception of the man's genius.

Furthermore, no better editor could have been found than Mr. Yarmolinsky. He is the author of the best biographies of Turgenev and Dostoevski that have ever appeared in English; and his critical judgment is as fine as his scholarship.

The District Crisis

Six Agencies Settle Washington Budget

Separation Of Federal And Local Items Urged; District Committee Should Treat Finances, Aided By Representative.

The Post presents the sixth of a series of articles on the problems of the District of Columbia.

By Merlo J. Pusey.

IF A municipal project in Baltimore, after being worked out in full detail by local authorities with the aid of expert advice and public hearings, had to be submitted to six different outside agencies, each having authority to riddle the plan completely, we should soon hear an indignant chorus proclaiming that Maryland's legislators were "teched in the haid." Yet, that is exactly the process through which the District budget is forced every year.

MERLO J. PUSEY.

The present Board of Commissioners has been especially conscientious in preparing its programs of expenditures. First, it calls for detailed estimates from the heads of departments. When all these have been assembled open hearings are held to give the fullest possible opportunity for expression of public opinion on all items in the budget and all needs for community service. With this information at hand, the Commissioners make their budget for the ensuing year.

Proposed expenditures are invariably trimmed because of the necessity of keeping the outlay within the estimated revenue. Needs of each department are balanced against the needs of the community as a whole, so that the final budget represents the best judgment of the Commissioners as to how the anticipated funds—which are never adequate to finance all desirable services and improvements—may be most advantageously spent. Budget-making of this sort has come to be recognized as essential to the orderly operation of any government.

In other American cities the planning of expenditures ends with the approval of the budget by the local authorities. In Washington, unfortunately, that is merely the beginning. The budget must then go to the Federal Budget Bureau where it is usually revised from the national rather than the local viewpoint. Next it goes to Congress where it is again subjected to study and hearings by a sub-committee of the House Committee on Appropriations.

Local Appropriations Go To Special Committee.

IT IS WORTHY of note that the local appropriations bill does not go to the regular District committees in either house. Being constantly in touch with affairs of the Capital City these committees are the most competent groups in Congress to decide issues involving the welfare of the Nation's Capital. Nevertheless, the local budget is sent to committees handling national supply bills to which it has no actual relationship.

Difficulty is often experienced in filling posts on the District appropriations sub-committees. Several Congressmen are reported to have refused the chairmanship this year. That is not unnatural. Congressmen like to serve on committees that handle matters of direct interest to their constituents. Except when a man like Tom Blanton finds keen delight in badgering the local community, there is little interest in its affairs on the part of appropriations committee members. A narrow viewpoint toward Washington seems to be deliberately assumed in some cases to create a reputation for economy that cannot be sustained when national spending bills are under consideration.

Items surviving the scrutiny of committeemen drafted for that service are sent to the House, where further cuts may be made. As a rule the Senate sub-committee takes a more understanding attitude toward local appropriations. In recent years it has corrected some of the most flagrant blunders of both the Budget Bureau and the House And the Senate customarily follows its advice. But in the sixth review of the budget by agencies unfamiliar with the detailed requirements of the local government a controversy always arises. Indeed, the most discouraging quarrels of recent years over the District's fiscal problem have centered in the conference committee.

By the time the budget has run the gahtlet of friendly, hostile or ignorant criticism in these six agencies local authorities may not even recognize their handiwork. Usually their plans have been ruthlessly upset. It is not at all surprising to find that funds have been shifted from some department that is desperately in need of larger facilities to a project of far less urgency in which Congress happens to be interested. Almost every appropriation under these circumstances is a compromise, not between two local interests, but between essential community service and the whims of a few willful legislators from distant States.

National And Local Budgets Can Be Split.

SO LONG AS one branch of Congress lightly regards its obligation as a city council for Washington, no complete remedy for this ridiculous situation is likely to be found. But one important step can be taken: the local and national budgets can be completely separated. From the simple viewpoint of keeping the records straight and excluding from the Federal budget items that have no place there, this change should have been effected years ago.

Students of government have frequently condemned this impossible diffusion of fiscal responsibility. Schmeckebier and Willoughby in their study of the District government for the Brookings Institution have this to say:

It is submitted that this system is one which in most respects does violence to correct principles of public administration and is productive of confusion in determining and making provision for the financial needs of the two governments and in stating the accounts in a manner in which financial condition and operations may be clearly known. There are few changes affecting the government of the District of Columbia that are of greater importance than that of the correction of this condition by giving to that government its own distinct system of financial administration • • •

The Fiscal Relations Committee quotes approvingly an expert conclusion that the confused policy of formulating the District budget "is both wrong in principle and unsatisfactory in practice." It makes the further point that neither the Commissioners nor the Budget Bureau now have authority to prepare a full program of expenditures for Washington. "More effective financial responsibility on the part of the District Commissioners might be achieved," says the report, "if they were charged with formulating the budget completely, with advice and assistance from an advisory council."

One principal argument has been advanced to justify the Budget Bureau's veto of District officials' plans. It is said that since the Government contributes to the support of the Capital City it should retain control over its budget. Assuming that that logic is entirely sound, five reviews of the local appropriations bill in Congress are more than essential to safeguard the national interest. I am unable to see a shred of reason in a system which denies to the heads of our local government the right to present their own proposals to Congress.

Bills Also Receive Budget Bureau Scrutiny.

THE WORD "proposals" is used advisedly, for bills as well as budgets must pass through this same bottleneck. If the Commissioners prepare a bill, or if a measure from Capitol Hill is approved by them, the Budget Bureau must decide whether it conforms to the President's program. If it does not, then a statement to that effect must be sent to Congress along with the bill. That is doubtless sound practice so far as Federal bureaus are concerned, but not when it is applied to a separate municipality.

The worst result of this chaotic procedure is that it makes a mockery of local government. In any circumstances the difficulties of using Congress as a city council are tremendous. When the city fathers are even deprived of the privilege of dealing with that body directly the situation becomes well-nigh hopeless.

Of course the Budget Bureau is not responsible for this procedure. Nor is the outcry against it any reflection upon strict budgeting. Efficient government these days is usually marked by strict budgetary control. The only point I wish to make is that the District should be permitted to formulate its own program of expenditures and send its own bills to Congress without having them ripped to pieces by a Federal bureau which measures all proposals by a national, as distinguished from a local yardstick.

Certainly, then, one of the leading slogans in the current movement for reform should be "End Budget Bureau domination over local affairs!"

As for the remainder of the problem of expediting necessary bills through Congress, one cannot be so positive. Even if the Commissioners are allowed to deal directly with Congress, and are granted power to control routine municipal matters without resort to legislation, they will still be confronted by the tremendous task of developing a smooth-working relationship with leaders in District affairs on the Hill. How can that problem be attacked?

Delegate For District Recommended By Observer.

FROM MY OWN observations and extensive consultation on the matter, I am convinced that an effective first step would be an act granting the District a delegate in the House. A delegate from Washington sat in the House under territorial form of government. Restoration of that right would not necessarily imply a revival of a territorial regime. It would merely signify desire on the part of Congress to give more attention to the District point of view—to give the local community fair play in presenting its case in the House, even though it would have no vote under this arrangement.

So long as the District has no popular government, the method of selecting a delegate might prove to be something of a dilemma. If chosen by the people, he might work at cross purposes with the Board of Commissioners, thus defeating the purpose of establishing a liaison between the local government and Congress. One of the Commissioners might serve, except that their time is already taken up with administrative duties. If the delegate were to function as a member of both the District Committee and the appropriations sub-committee (so long as they are separate) and act as chief informer on local matters on the floor, his time would be pretty well occupied. As a temporary arrangement, perhaps it would be well to have the Commissioners select a full-time delegate from a group of citizens to be nominated by the proposed advisory council.

This suggestion would need to be carefully integrated with other changes in the local regime. Assuming that harmony between the city fathers and the delegate could be assured, however, it should not be difficult to establish in this way a better understanding than now prevails between the District Building and the south wing of the Capitol. And once the desirability of the arrangement could be established, it would be the best possible wedge to open the way for more adequate representation.

Aviator Says N. Y. Attorney Is Leftist Agent

Several Indictments Are Planned in Enlistment of Fliers for Spain.

By the Associated Press.

New York, Jan. 15.—Back from a month of dropping bombs on behalf of the Spanish loyalist government, Eddie Schneider, Jersey City, N. J., aviator, said today he was signed up by a New York lawyer to serve in the Spanish war at $1,500 a month.

Schneider was questioned by Assistant United States Attorney John F. Dailey, jr., who announced he would seek indictments from the Federal grand jury next week against several New Yorkers in connection with the enlistment of American aviators for Spanish service.

Interviewed as he entered Dailey's office, Schneider said the lawyer negotiated with him for his services and handed him his steamship ticket for transportation to Spain.

The flier said he quit the war to comply with President Roosevelt's neutrality policy, and that the Spanish Embassy in Paris advanced him his fare home pending payment of his salary.

Schneider said he participated in daily bombing raids in Spain for three weeks, flying remodeled sports planes and dropping bombs through a hole in the cockpit floor.

He has a record of more than 3,000 air hours since 1928, and has set several transcontinental flying records, he said. He left here six weeks ago with Maj. Fred Lord, who is still in Spain.

Dailey said it was unlikely the grand jury would hear testimony from Bert Acosta and Maj. Gordon Berry, free-lance fliers who returned yesterday from Spain and whom Dailey questioned, but that agencies hiring Americans for Spanish service would be prosecuted "to the limit."

The district attorney said Federal agents were investigating the stories told by Acosta and Berry.

CHAPTER 17.

I began to think Julian mad. I had entered Peter's office with the police the night of the murder. I hadn't seen any living witness locked inside.

"You don't mean——? It wasn't Lee?" I asked, remembering that I had already told him about Lee's having seen somebody approach Peter's office before the murder. I'd been fearing for Lee ever since, and had been sorry I had mentioned it. That had been a bit of indiscretion.

Julian shook his head. "Lee didn't see the murder committed. This witness did—saw the whole thing. I guess I was the only one who realized that. But he's still here in the house. And, on my word! I believe he's going to help me catch the real culprit."

The strange gleam in Julian's eyes frightened me. If I were to reach for my gun now he'd notice it . . . It wouldn't be wise.

"Living witness!" I reiterated in dubious amazement. "Then did somebody watch that murder through the window?"

"No," Julian grinned cryptically. "He was right there in the office when it happened."

"Did the murderer know it?"

Still Another Clew.

"That's an important question . . . I—hope he didn't. But," Julian looked at his watch, "it's after 11. Mark will be coming to bed any time now. There's just one thing more," again his eyes shone with sardonic mischief. "An important clew the police don't know."

"What's that, sir?"

I had risen to go. He motioned me back, now.

"You know all that talk about the ancestor's picture in the library—that painting over the mantel?"

"I heard some, sir."

"Maybe you haven't been told exactly what the relationship of the man in the picture was supposed to be. There's been enough talk about it lately, though," he added in disgust.

"I—Cora said——"

"Yeah." he nodded, his downdrawn lips showing distaste, "Cora would. She'd be the one to pass information to strangers as fast as they came to the house."

I hesitated. The light had gone out of his face, leaving it severe and gaunt.

"Go on!" he ordered.

"Well, sir, Cora said the picture was of Mr. Alexander's grandfather—his father's father."

"Right! His paternal grandfather. I couldn't be mistaken about that. I've even heard them tell anecdotes that carried out the story of his being the Brian ancestor——"

Noise in the Hall.

There was a slight noise in the hall outside. Julian cocked his head and raised one eyebrow. For a moment we both listened to the silence about us. Then Julian came closer.

"Well," he whispered, a triumphant glitter in his eyes, his lips twisted into a thick smile, "I've learned the name of that man in the picture. He is not a Brian. But you must go to your room." He crossed to the door and stood with his hand on the knob. "Remember. Be on your guard. There's still a murderer loose in this house." Again he grinned vaguely.

"When shall I see you again, sir?"

Julian opened the door a crack and peered into the hall. Closing it noiselessly, he whispered: "Tomorrow. Mark will be at the factory. He's arranging to move all the offices down there again. And he's asked Miss Hunt to go with him. You see, she's his stenographer—a part of his business inheritance. I'll be in the office. Come in at 10 without your uniform. You could be some outside businessman as far as the rest of the office force are concerned. They don't know you're the butler, do they?"

"I don't think so, sir."

"Well, I'll tell you then what I want you to do."

There was no one in sight when I came out into the hall. And the dim ceiling lights were still on. I was expected to turn them off nights after I'd made sure the house was well locked.

I tiptoed downstairs and crossed the kitchen to lock the back door. The dense fog outside surprised me. It must have come suddenly and was so thick now that even the store hut where Frank slept was only a faint ghost, and the trees beyond had completely disappeared.

From the hall I could hear Cora bumping around preparatory to retiring. Jean's light was already out. Miss Hunt's room was quiet, but a light shone over the transom.

Surprises Mark.

Someone was still in the library. I slipped down quietly. There stood Mark examining the portrait over the mantel.

"Do you want anything, sir, before I retire?" I asked.

Mark drew back quickly and flushed. "What? No . . . No. I was just going . . . Oh, Bob!"

I had started on toward the front door. "Yes, sir?"

"You're very careful about locking everything?"

"Yes, sir."

"I suppose the police are right about keeping the dogs shut up," he mused dubiously. "They've probably got some plain-clothes man hidden somewhere and it wouldn't be safe for him. But—well, a night like this," he grinned apologetically, indicating the fog with a backward tilt of his head.

"Yes, sir," I agreed sympathetically. "I'll see everything's locked. It is a bit thick out."

I had gone a few steps farther when Mark called me again.

"Yes, sir?"

"Where were you just before dinner tonight?"

I was somewhat taken aback. I'd been up in my room making notes for Larry. I'd meant to phone him, too. But had been surprised at the lateness of the hour and had hurried down to serve dinner.

"I was—in my room, sir. Sort of cleaning up before serving."

Mark had come out into the hall and stood scrutinizing me carefully.

"You didn't hear any commotion?"

I stared at him in astonishment. "No, sir!"

"You didn't see anything out of the way?"

"Why, what do you mean, sir?"

"I mean you didn't see anything wrong—anything that would be a clew we could turn over to the police?"

"No, sir!"

Mark nodded. "Good night, Bob."

He went off down the hall. I heard him mount the stairs to the second floor. And after I had finished locking up I turned out the lights and went on up to my room.

What could Mark have meant? I'd read somewhere that there was only a small margin between sanity and insanity. It looked as if the margin had slipped in this house. Were they all crazy? Was that what Cora meant by "crazy house?"

Pulling down the shades, I noted that fingers of fog were pressing closer in. I shivered involuntarily. Wanting the comforting assurance of some connection with humanity beyond the gray veil, I pushed aside my overcoat which hid the phone in the closet and took down the receiver.

Martin in the vacant house answered. "Why the deuce didn't you call us before?" he demanded with such vituperant profanity that I knew his nerves were getting ragged.

"Why? Anything up?"

New Danger.

"Lord, how do we know?" Men watchin' the exits can't even tell what's goin' on. And your brother's been phonin' ever' twenty minutes since 5 o'clock."

"What does he want?"

"Want? He wants to talk to yuh. I think he's figured somethin' out."

"Can you put me in touch with him now?"

"He ain't in now. Said the last time he phoned he had to go somewhere. And he'd see you tomorrow sometime."

"Tell him it's hard for me to get away."

"Yeah. He figured that. Says he'll come up there with Sutton like they was lookin' for clews."

"That all he wanted to say?"

"Well, he said for you and all of us to watch out. Somethin's in the air up there. Don't trust nobody an' keep your gun handy."

"Think he meant something special?"

"Well—where was you at 5 o'clock?"

The same question Mark had asked me! "Up here, writing a report for Larry," I explained in amazement. "Why?"

"Lord a mighty! Don't you know about the rumpus downstairs?"

"No!" I gasped. "What happened?"

Martin's astonishment at my not knowing drew forth more expletives.

"But what was it, man?" I repeated.

Society Again Dances Old Va. Cotillion

By Jessie Ash Arndt.

Tradition, established when the first Virginia cotillion was given at Gadsby's Tavern for George Washington, was observed last night at the George Mason Hotel in Alexandria, where members of Virginia and Washington society gathered for the Virginia Cotillion of 1937.

Three years ago, when the colonial party was revived on the centennial of the original function, it was held at the historic old tavern. The number of guests and the hazard to the relics in the tavern, however, made it necesary to hold the dance last year and again this season in the George Mason.

Southern creeper was twined around the columns of the Lee ballroom, where an orchestra played for dancing. The figure eights and fans of the cotillion were executed as gracefully as in the days of the colonial ladies and gentlemen, and lacked only the picturesque frills and knee breeches worn by the gentlemen of that era to bring back the whole scene to life again. The frocks of the girls were as fluffy and bouffant as those of their great-great-grandmothers.

Grand March.

Promptly at 12:30 there was a grand march to the Le eroom downstairs where a banquet was served at tables draped with Southern smilax. The same menu served when Washington was a guest was prepared last night: creamed chicken in pattie cases, peas, beaten biscuits and a dessert.

Negro singers entertained with Southern songs in which many of the guests joined and to which they played a tinkling accompaniment on their glasses.

Several cocktail and supper parties preceded the cotillion. Col. and Mrs. John Sheehan, of Fairfax, were hosts at a cocktail party at which their guests were Mr. and Mrs. John S. Barbour, Mr. and Mrs. Edward Howrey, Col. and Mrs. Henry Eglin, Mr. and rs. Amar Cater, Mr. and Mrs. Robert Graham, Mr. and Mrs. Beverley Coleman, Mr. and Mrs. Ray Middleton and Mr. and Mrs. Frederick Richardson.

Mr. Jack Scott, of Alexandria, had as his guests Miss Ann Barrett, of Warrenton; Miss Randolph Richardson, of Fairfax; Nina Carter Tebb, of Middleburg; Mr. Willam Lipscomb, of Leesburg; Mrs. Charles H. LeFevre and her daughters, Mrs. LeFevre Luke and Miss Sally Mitchell Lefevre; Mrs. Frank Mason Willard, of Alexandria; Mr. and Mrs. Hunter Osbourne, of Washington; Mr. and Mrs. Peter Knowles and Mr. and Mrs. Frank Goodwin, of Alexandria; Mr. and Mrs. William Boncure, of Washington; Miss Grace Powell, Mr. and Mrs. John B. Gordon, Mr. Douglas Smith, Mr. Swan Sinclair, Mr. Marshall Beverley, Miss Peggy Matheson and Mr. Clement Conger, all of Alexandria.

Supper Precedes Dance.

Mr. Kemp Slaughter, who entertained at a supper before the cotillion, had as guests Miss Cornelia Bowie, Mrs. Guy W. S. Castle, Miss Elizabeth Jobe, the First Secretary of the Bolivian Legation, Senor Don George de la Barra; Mr. and Mrs. John L. Hudgkins, Mr. and Mrs. Richardson, who managed to make two parties before the dance; Dr. Joseph McMahon, Mrs. Eldon King and Mr. Sampel Duvall.

Mr. Kelsey Saint was host at his home on California street at a cocktail party. His guests included Miss Mary Agnes Young, Miss Betty Marsh and Mr. James Wimsatt, of Washington; Mr. Robert McCandlish, Mr. D. A. Rucker and Miss Mary Blake, of Fairfax, as well as Miss Randolph Richardson who, like her parents, attended two parties before the cotillion; Miss Sally McCandlish and Mr. Frank Mead, of Batlimore; Mr. Harry Gray, Mr. Gwyn Harper, Mr. John T. Kinnier, of Clarendon, and Mr. Charles McDaniel.

Baroness von Below who headed the receiving line was in honey-colored satin with cream lace cap sleeves and wore a necklace which matched her tiara of topaz set in antique gold. Mrs. Richardson who also received was in a gown of fuchia taffeta with quilted wing effects at the neck; Mrs. John S. Barbour, wore a gown of white crepe trimmed in bugles, and Mrs C. A. S. Sinclair, black satin. Mr. John B. Gordon was making introductions during the first of the evening.

MISS CHARLOTTE BOERNER.

Has Sung Leading Parts in Noted Operas in This Country Since Her Arrival From Germany; Will Soon Join Lieut. Ringo.

Miss Charlotte Boerner, who was one of the artists presented at the musicale following the Speaker's dinner at the White House Thursday night, came to Washington unexpectedly to help entertain the guests of the President and Mrs. Roosevelt.

Mme. Elisabeth Schumann, who was to have sung, was arriving from Europe aboard the Bremen, but the ship was delayed by fog and could not dock for several hours. At 3 o'clock Thursday afternoon Mr. Coenraad V. Bos, accompanist for both artists, told Miss Boerner of the situation and asked if she could come to Washington and take Mme. Schumann's place on the program. She did, even singing many of Mme. Schumann's numbers.

It was her first visit to Washington and she spent yesterday afternoon visiting places of interest in the Capital. She arrived from Germany a little more than a year ago and last June, was married to Lieut. Glen R. Ringo, U. S. N., now on duty on the U. S. S. Lexington, who has many friends in Washington.

Immediately after their marriage Lieut. Ringo returned to duty on the Lexington and his bride left for Hollywood, where she sang leading roles in two operas in the Hollywood Bowl, that of Nedda in "Pagliacci" and the title role in "The Bartered Bride." Later Lieut. Ringo joined her and they spent a brief honeymoon in Long Beach and in San Francisco, where they were extensively entertained. In October she sang leading roles with Rethburg, Martinelli, Pinza and other Metropolitan artists, in the opening of the San Francisco Opera Company's season.

Next week she will leave for the West Coast to rejoin her husband, and will return to New York again for concerts with the New York Philharmonic on March 18, 19 and 21.

She is a niece of Mr. Theodore M. Stephan, of Brooklyn, who was in the United States consular service in Germany and England for some years, and Mrs. Stephan, and as a child was often a guest at their home in Bremen. She made her musical debut in America, singing Marguerite in "Faust," with the Philadelphia Symphony in 1931, and first sang in New York the following year when she was selected by Toscanini to appear with Nelson Eddy in the world premiere of Respiglio's "Mary of Egypt," with the composer conducting.

Envoy, Wife Entertained At Cocktails

Dr. and Mme. Palic Give Party for Minister, Mme. Hurban.

The Minister of Czechoslovakia and Mme. Hurban were guests of honor yesterday at the first function which has been given for them since their recent arrival in the Capital. The Attache of the Legation, Dr. Vladimir Palic, and Mme. Palic entertained a group of the younger members of the diplomatic set at a cocktail party at their home.

Mme. Hurban and the young hostess, whose marriage to Dr. Palic took place in the early fall, received in the living room. Yellow daffodils gave a gay note of color on the mantel behind them and palms and ferns were used elsewhere in decoration. Mme. Hurban wore a gown of brown velvet trimmed in gold, a small brown turban and brown accessories, all with touches of gold. Mme. Palic's frock was a silver tunic with a dash of red at the neck, worn over a black crepe skirt.

In the dining room the buffet table was set, with an embroidered Czechoslovakian cloth, all in white and a centerpiece of red roses. The table, where punch was served, was covered with a cloth of natural linen, embroidered in a bright design. Both were among the linens sent by Dr. Palic's mother as a wedding gift, and which arrived just yesterday morning. They have been on the way for three months and the bridal couple almost despaired of receiving them. To their surprise, the great boxes with these and quantities of china and glassware sent them from Czechoslovakia at the same time, came just in time for the party. There was no time to separate the glasses from their packings so only the linens were used.

Among those in the company were the Naval Attache of the French Embassy and Mme. Sable, the Financial Counselor of the Rumanian Legation, Mr. George Boncesco, who came with the Assistant Financial Counselor and Mme. Dimitriu, as Mme. Boncesco was unable to be there; Mme. Lombard, wife of the Military Attache of the French Embasy; Mr. Michal Budny, of the Polish Embassy; Mr. William Ryan; the Secretary of the Yugoslav Legation, Mr. Rastko Petrovic, who was there with Miss Marjorie Duncan, of London, a guest of the Ambassador of Turkey and Mme. Ertegun. Miss Duncan was in brown, clips of old gold in Egyptian design trimming the neck and belt of her frock, and she wore a small off-the-face hat.

Also among the guests were the Air Attache of the Chilean Embassy and Senora de Puga, the Commercial Attache and Senora de Campbell, accompanied by their daughter, Senorita Eleanor Campbell; the Commercial Attache of the Brazilian Embassy, Mr. Paulo G. Haslocher; Miss Diane Rowland, in a mink coat and small brown hat; Mme. A. Stransky, wife of the Czechoslovakian Counselor in Bombay, who is visiting in Falls Church, Va.; Mrs. Thomas Dawson and Miss Lilita Dawson, Dr. Joseph Mayer, of the Library of Congress, who plans to go to Czechoslovakia for research and study next fall; Mrs. Mayer, Mr. and Mrs. Ernest Cherrington, Mr. and Mrs. Bertram Hulen, Mr. Carroll Kenworthy, Dr. Josef Nemecek, Counselor of the Czechoslovakian Legation, and Mr. Otaker Kabelac, First Secretary.

Mrs. E. Contee Meredith and Mrs. Monica D. Woodell will be joint hostesses at a cocktail party on the evening of January 19, at the home of the latter, 1801 Sixteenth street, in honor of Michigan residents arriving for the Inauguration.

THE MERRY WHIRL by MARYLYN

Yesterday afternoon was full of fun. It started off at 2:45 with the friendly boom of the salute gun at Fort Myer, which welcomed Gen. Leon B. Kromer to the post as honor guest for the "ride." Gen. Albert J. Bowley, of Baltimore, Third Corps Area commander, was unable to attend.

Those Army boys certainly can ride and had the spectators, mostly civilians, sitting on the edge of the seats, open-mouthed and wide-eyed at their performance.

In addition to the residents of Fort Myer, who always turn out for such affairs, we saw Peggy Wheeler, wearing a very swingy coat of a blocked plaid of beige and brown tones; the Bryden girls, Ellen and Marion, who were wearing dark wine and greens and Louise Myers, who was sitting in Johnny Pugh's green roadster.

• • • •

Then, after it was over, we found it just time to go out to Alban Towers and the tea party which Mme. von Numers, wife of the Secretary of the Finnish Legation, was giving.

Their apartment was really lovely—the late afternoon sunshine streaming in the windows, gave everything a rich, golden glow—a sort of Midas touch.

The son of the household, 2-year-old Johann is a most prepossessing little chap, fair-haired and with round, surprisingly wise eyes.

His pretty mother, wearing a black velvet skirt and orange and gold brocaded blouse, is a charming hostess. Not only that, but during the chat over the teacups, we discovered that she had made the delicious lacey-cookies, the spicey tarts, the feathery nut cake, all herself.

It was a cozy party, small enough so everyone could really talk to everyone else. Among those there were Mrs. George Oakley Totten, in brown with an accordion pleated jabot of brown and cream-colored crepe; Mrs. William Prescott, who carried on a conversation in Fininsh with Johann, who carefully spoke to everyone else in English. That at 2 years—what will he do when grown up? Others there were Mme. Okazaki, whose small daughter, Yoshi, is Johann's playmate, and who was in black with trim little collar and cuffs of white lace; Mrs. Lee Murphy, in black with wee slanted pockets of rhinestones, just matching the trimming on her bonnet hat, and titian haired Mrs. Robert Larsen, in black velvet demurely fashioned with a high collar and fastening down the front.

• • • •

And on again to still another afternoon doing. This time to the Chilean Embassy where the three daughters of Ambassador Trucco, Marta, Chela and Rebecca were hostesses at a cocktail party. Chela, in black was wearing her dark locks in a becoming halo roll; Martha's gown of peacock blue was trimmed at the neck and cuffs with a pointed arrangement, and petite Rebeca was in sea green.

Their embassy lends itself to entertaining whether formal or informal. The long richly hung dining room was a pretty picture—the table with its colorful centerpiece and platters of cakes and sandwiches, whose appearance was only surpassed by their delectability—the pretty young girls in their attractive costumes, chatting with young men of the diplomatic corps—the soft musical blending of many languages—and the flattering glow of candle light.

• • • •

Now for a few whirlographs—

There was Evelyn Walker in black with a dashing sash of greenish blue and scarlet who was serving; Manuel Trucco, jr., greeting each guest and then presenting him a tall tinkling glass; Ditlef Knudsen and Erasto Villa—Pancho, to most of his friends—discussing the moving of the old University Club into the Racquet Club; pretty Senorita Aguirre presiding over her end of the table, and wearing a frock of henna crepe; Gloria Sacasa, in turquoise blue, chatting briefly with her brother; Nora deWitt arriving with Ren van der Wyck; the Beal sisters, Betty, in a black pin-striped tailleur, and Nancy Mann, so surrounded by people when we saw her that only her becoming hat was visible; Olga Patterson in black starched crepe embroidered with little gold crowns, and talking to Michal Budny, who still has his nice vacation tan.

Others there were Maruca Sacasa, Anne and Aletha Harcourt, both in black. The work of these clever young English artists yesterday spurred Senor Don Sergio Huneeus to promise he would do some fancy caricatures; Nemo Nemecek, smiling a broad farewell and off to somewhere else; Fernando Illanes, who has an excellent memory for names; Richardo Siri, Bill Ryan and Napier Perlato.

MARY HAWORTH'S MAIL

After Two Years' Marriage, Wife Believes She Loves Another Man Better Than Her Husband.

DEAR MARY HAWORTH: I have been married two years and I am not in love with my husband. I was only 18 years of age at the time I ran off and got married. I thought then I was very much in love. My husband is seven years my senior and the most thoughtful and loving man in the world. He loves the very ground I walk on. I could not hurt him. He once told me that he would not know what to do without me.

• • • •

I have been completely faithful to him, but at the same time I love another man. I went with him long ago. He married a very nice girl one week after my marriage was announced. They now have a baby and are happy. He still loves me and would break up his home to be with me, he frankly told me.

• • • •

If I left my husband it would break his heart. If I went to the man I love, it would break up his home. As it is, I am miserable. Do you think I am solely attentive to my own interests? Please offer your opinion. TWENTY.

• • • •

Worthwhile Love.

DEAR TWENTY: You are behaving entirely too much like Lot's wife for your own good. You need to be completely re-educated, psychologically. When a married woman starts indulging in this type of introspection concerning the state of her emotions, she is craning her neck in the direction of emotional disaster. I have just been reading an excellent book, "Nervous Breakdown," authored by the late Dr. W. Beran Wolfe, at the time he was director of the Community Church Mental Hygiene Clinic of New York City, which I recommend to you. It can be procured from the Public Library.

• • • •

Don't let the title of the book frighten or mislead you. It could well have been subtitled "A Handy Guide Book to Realistic Happiness and Success." The author uses actual case histories in pointing out the almost universally faulty technique which men and women bring to marriage and social relationships in general. Your continued psychic involvement in that out-lived adolescent attachment is infantile, to say the least. You have outlived it actually, through contracting marriage with a fine and congenial man, but you are failing through ignorance and wilfulness, to outlive it mentally and emotionally. This you can easily do, if you will only inform yourself of the reason why you should do it—quite as much for your own sake as for your husband's sake and the sake of the other man's family.

• • • •

The only love worth pinning one's faith to is the love which is the happy by-product of years of mutual co-operation, of mutual suffering and mutual achievement, of mutual adjustment and mutual understanding, consolation, encouragement and loyalty. This you can build up with your husband, without wrecking anybodys' life, least of all your own, if you will put your hand to the plow, turn your gaze steadfastly toward your husband and your united future, and carry on with some realistic understanding of what your goal is, and of the steps whereby it may be attained.

• • • •

It is my guess that you fancy yourself in love with the other man and out of love with your husband, largely because you haven't yet learned the fundamental principles of achieving happiness in the most intimate of all human relationships. You are excusing this failure by saying, "It is because I don't love my husband. If only I had married the other man. He is the one I really love; the one for whom I was meant." And you think this only because you don't really know him; because you haven't lived with him; because he is sufficiently remote from reality, as it affects your daily life, for you to fit him comfortably into a self-deluding dream. Romantic love never solved any problem yet. It throws a glorifying cloud around reality for a time, but unless reality is intelligently dealt with, in spite of the mist, it speedily evaporates and the same old reality is disclosed in its sharp-edged massiveness, waiting the inevitable reckoning.

• • • •

When you have learned the A-B-C's of adult co-operation in marriage, it is more than probable you will no longer give a second thought to the other man, other than to be sympathetically hopeful that he, too, is happy and successful in his marriage to that "very nice girl." M. H.

Young Girl's Question.

DEAR MARY HAWORTH: I am a girl 17 years old, and have been going with a man of 30. The question of marriage hasn't come up yet, but just in case it should, do you think there is too much difference in our ages for us to be happy together? A close friend of mine says the man is too old for me; and that the difference in our ages would tell against our happiness in the future, even if not right away. What do you think? LAURA BELLE.

• • • •

DEAR LAURA BELLE: One would need to know you and your beau very well indeed before one could safely say whether or not he is too old to make a suitable husband for you. For more depends upon your respective temperaments, and upon the degree of mental maturity you possess, than upon the number of birthdays each has had. I very much doubt that a girl of 17 is ready for marriage at all, in the sense of being adequate to the serious responsibility it represents; but if she must marry, she would probably find greater security with a man around 30—providing he is prepared to be indulgent to her shortcomings until she can outgrow them—than she would with a callow stripling her own age.

• • • •

Many self-constituted authorities on the marital relationship maintain that 10 years' difference in ages is not too much, while others hold that to be an ideal difference. Still others contend that husbands and wives who are approximately the same age achieve greater compatability with less effort and strain. I personally believe it is entirely an individual matter—that corresponding ages, or mathematically spaced difference in ages, is not half so important as certain mutually possessed social, cultural, mental and spiritual attributes. M. H.

Claire Tilden Dress Pattern

WORTH its weight in flattery is this happy-go-lucky, leisure-time frock, an "inspired" design by Claire Tilden! When have you seen as fetching a neckline, caught together as 'tis by a "shoestring" bow of ribbon? Where could you find more charmingly gathered sleeves, made to puff at the top and simmer down gently into a snug fit above or below the elbow?

A flared skirt for this? By all means, for it's the newest way to interpret the mode for fullness. Make this frock yourself and you can take a double "bow" in it, first because no one will guess you made it, and secondly, because it's such a truly flattering style to wear everywhere. Detailed sewing guide accompanies this pattern.

Pattern 280 is cut in sizes 14, 16, 18, 20, 32, 34, 36, 38, 40 and 42. Size 16 requires 3⅞ yards 39 inch fabric.

Send fifteen cents (15) in coins or stamps (preferably coins) for this pattern. Write clearly size, name, address and style number.

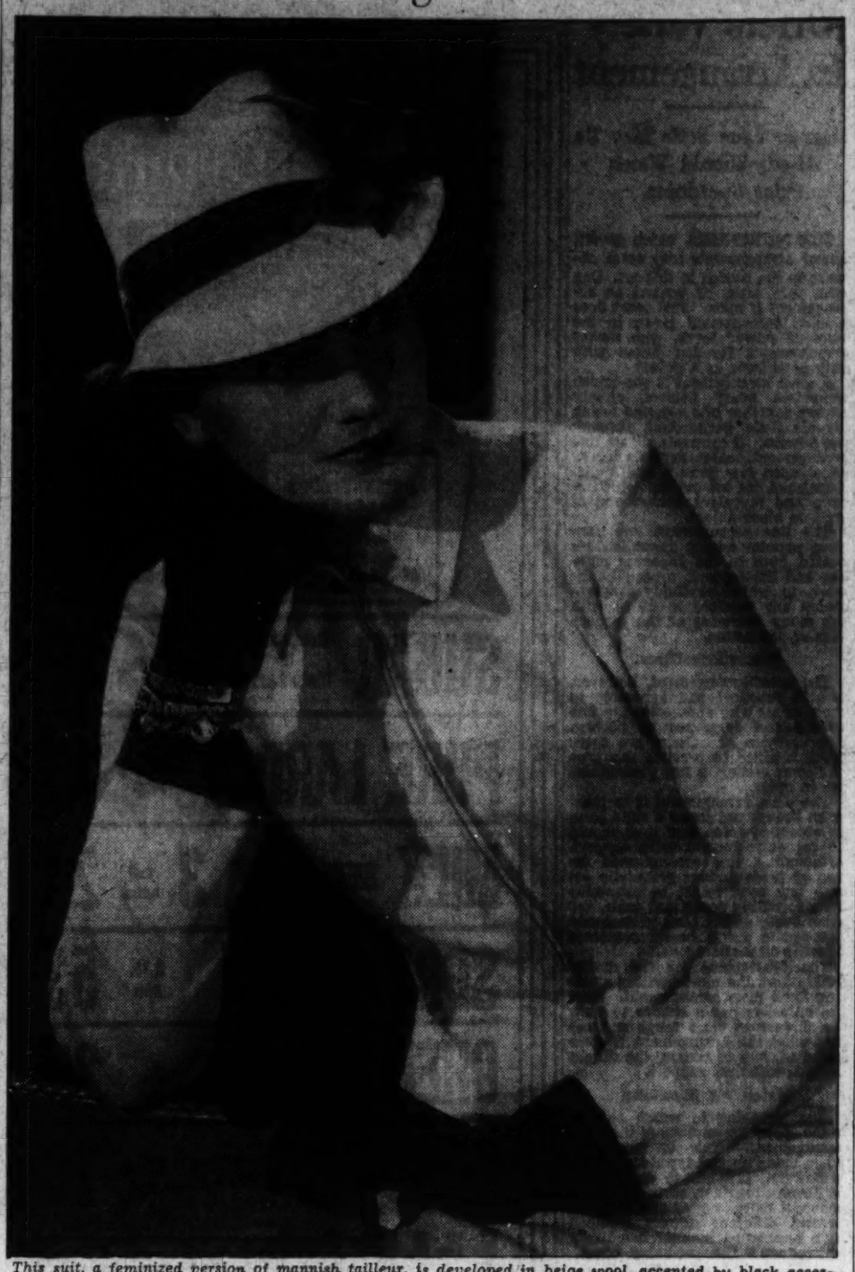
Walnut Shells Used For New Boutonnieres

Paris (U.P.).—Bright new boutonnieres are made of painted English walnut shells attached to a leafy sprig. The nut shells are laquered bright red and yellow or are silvered or gilded with two or three shells forming the boutonnieres that are worn high at the neck of fur collars or are used as trimming for simple sports hats of felt.

Natural Makeup Now the Keynote For Movie Stars

Hollywood—Make-up, says Perc Westmore, Warner Brothers expert in such things, must now be applied to fool people. For a long time women have been putting on such brilliant lipstick that the most gullible man couldn't miss artificiality. Girls haven't been trying to trick anybody with those unnaturally rosy cheeks and exotic, hand-drawn eyebrows. But now the new order is that every girl must be an artist in applying her cosmetics—only enough rouge to simulate a natural flush, enough lipstick to make the lips beguiling and eyebrows brushed to follow the natural bony structure above the eye. All the girls must brush out their locks, so they fall in loose, natural waves, and forget hair tints that are too artificial.

Suits Are Invading Mid-Season Mode



This suit, a feminized version of mannish tailleur, is developed in beige wool, accented by black accessories. The zipper jacket closing is finished at throat with jeweled cuff links; glittering bracelets also add a feminine note. A velvet band gives dash to high-crowned straw hat.

Suits Reign as Smartest Daytime Costume Contrary to the Ultra-Feminine Trend

By Ethel Ehlen.
The Post Fashion Editor.

WHETHER it is in defiance of the ultra-feminine styles of fall and winter, or just a fashion whim, suits are tops at present as the smartest daytime costume you can don for any informal occasion. The strictly tailored suit, or the version which features simplicity without being manish are the accepted choice, sponsored by stylists.

The suit under your winter coat may be dark or light in color, according to your own preference. Both types are available, the dark designed for spring, and the brighter tones, created originally for Southern cruise wear. Either will bring a vernal touch to your winter wardrobe and add a bright spot of swank or color to your winter ensemble; both grand to wear immediately, and later on without a topcoat when the weather is warmer.

Manish-tailored suits are vying with those of more feminine design. The former are sleek and fitted, with such masculine details as padded shoulders and materials. The popular color range includes oxford gray and lighter tones of gray, navy, brown and black in solid tones; small checks, narrow stripes and mixtures. The theme in color, however, is as conservative and simple as the styling.

Suits of lighter and brighter tones, while stressing simplicity, usually are feminized by odd touches, such as zipper closings of contrasting color, sometimes finished with jeweled gadgets; softly feminine collars fitting the throat closely; unique buttons; skirts and jackets of contrasting materials and colors; bright ascot scarfs; patent leather or suede belts. Beige leads in the light-color parade, with dusty tones of pink, blue and green next in importance.

For afternoon wear, suits are given a scintillating air by the addition of jewelry, such as rhinestone clips at the throat, matched with bracelets of the same glittering stones. Massive-looking jewelry gives a sophisticated touch to an otherwise simple suit—this is usually silver or gold-colored metal or catalin in dark or brilliant colors. Light-colored suits are considered smartest when worn with blouses or chic sweaters of dark tones; dark suits can be either monotone in color theme, or take accents of striking contrast. Both are within the dictum of current fashion styling.

The popular bolero which started out as a peasant influence in frocks, has gone more formal and now appears as a suit fashioned of wool materials. It is an ideal under-coat suit, and because both tailored and feminine blouse or gilets may accompany it with good taste, is exceedingly versatile. Worn with a pique gilet, it is almost tailored in type, substituting a more complicated gilet or blouse of chiffon, it becomes an afternoon costume; in both instances, serving as either a suit or a frock.

Just below the hipline is the newest length for jackets of man-tailored suits. All suit-coats, however, are considerably shorter than formerly. The Norfolk suit is returning to fashion with a vengeance—it has invaded the realm of the strictly tailored and the spectator sports type of suit as well. In the spectator styling manner the Norfolk jacket is often of small-checks or mixtures, in soft woolens, with skirts repeating the predominant tone. Scarfs then often appear in a blaze of color, such as bright green, orangey yellow, brilliant blue or flame red.

TODAY'S HEALTH TALK

By Dr. Irving S. Cutter.

The reason children swallow foreign bodies is understandable when we recall their insatiable curiosity. The information which they gain about things through the senses of feeling and sight is not enough. They must taste them also. Particularly alluring are bright objects—those that are shiny or that have been painted, but the catalogue of these impediments is a long one and includes buttons, safety pins, straight pins, needles, tacks, coins, nuts of all kinds, fragments of bones, bits of metal, earrings, etc.

Little more than a generation ago articles that lodged in a bronchial tube were exceedingly hard to remove. Then came the epoch-making achievement of the Drs. Jackson, of Philadelphia, who, with an ingeniously devised set of instruments, found that they could reach most of these objects and recover them, whether they were lodged in the esophagus (passageway leading into the stomach) or in one of the bronchi. Today well-trained physicians equipped with the necessary instruments are available in most localities.

Anyone caring for numbers of infants and children will encounter many such accidents and should trouble in respiration or swallowing appear, the possibility should be kept in mind. In making a diagnosis, the X-ray is of great value and plates should be taken in two places at right angles to each other.

Youths Rude? Opposite Views Are Expressed

One Mother Finds Young People Well-Mannered; Other Raps Behavior.

By Margaret Wallace.

ARE YOUNG PEOPLE of today inexcusably rude in social life?

A mother recently wrote this column saying they were. She complained that they sought to make her home "a night club." Her letter has aroused wide interest among other mothers. Some have agreed, others have taken issue. The following letter is from a mother who makes a warm defense of the manners of the young men and women who come to her home:

"DEAR MISS WALLACE: Last Saturday I entertained a group of young people in compliment to my son. Having three sons of different ages with different tastes, I am pretty well acquainted with many types of youngsters.

"My son's guests were ushered into the rooms where they left their wraps. They were a well-behaved group of well-dressed young men and women who came to the drawing room where I stood to receive them with my son.

"Four generations of my husband's family have resided in and around our Capital City so the customs are pretty well known to us. Unlike the mother whose letter you printed last week, I cannot complain of lack of etiquette on the part of the friends of my children.

Defends Dance Customs.

"It is true that there is an ever increasing custom of dancing with escorts only. That is practiced more in public places than in private homes. Having such a cosmopolitan group, a floating population in our city, unless we are very well acquainted, I do not feel that this dancing with escorts only is a bad custom.

"We of the past generation would have been distressed to be burdened with our escorts for an entire evening. We would have been chagrined at our lack of popularity for the more names on our programs the more pride our escort felt in having asked us.

"At the party my sons' guests had a happy time. They were free to play cards, ping pong, pool or to dance as their fancy dictated. I noticed how little make-up the girls had on and learned that the extreme method of make-up is no longer popular in our younger set. I had wine decanters and glasses on the buffet. I noticed that only two or three partook of the wine. The rest liked the simple English drink of hot spicy cider and other soft drinks.

"I appreciated every handshake as my young guests bade me a cordial good night and expressed their enjoyment of the party."

Another Viewpoint.

But another mother agrees with our correspondent who maintains that the young people are inclined to turn her house into a night club for their pleasure. She writes:

"The young girls and boys who came to a little dinner dance I gave for my daughter were so loud in their laughter that the neighbors complained. They all drank far too much and left cigaret butts and ashes all over my drawing room instead of using the trays. When I saw they were drinking too much I told the maid not to serve any more. They were open in their protests and a group of them left to go to another home where they could get a drink. They did not bother to say good night to me or to my daughter. I have told my daughter that she must not invite these young people to my house or accept invitations to theirs. There were, of course, a few of the party who behaved properly. Do you think I am right?"

This mother is certainly right. It is better for her young daughter to have only a few friends and go to only a few parties than to associate with young men and young women who do not know the rules of good manners.

Pleasant HOMES

By Elizabeth McRae Boykin.

A FRIEND was showing us about her new and shining home. We descended finally to the cellar and the family playroom where three husky youngsters and their friends were whooping it up over a game of ping-pong. At the entrance to the playroom we came to several cabinets, and she opened their doors. Instead of the expected rows of jellies and preserves we saw a hodgepodge of dishes, yellow, white, green, flowered—emptied cheese glasses and odd assortments of cups and glasses.

"You know," she said, "I've always felt a little guilty about these. We've moved about quite a bit and ever so often acquired a few new sets of dishes . . . five-and-tenners and "sale" sets. We'd get a new set after cups and the like had been broken in the last one, but my Scotch soul rebelled at throwing away the left-overs. We moved them around till my husband vowed he'd smash them himself some day—but, well, here they are, and I've at last found a use for them." She nodded toward the roistering young ones in the playroom.

"They like to have cocoa and cookies and sandwiches and things like that—they're young and boisterous and bound to break things, no matter how careful they try to be. Well, these are for them—they can have all the people they want and serve them anything the larder will afford, providing they use these plates and cups, and clean them up afterward! My old icebox is in the cellar, too, and it takes very little ice to have it cold enough for ginger ale and such things which they like to serve their friends. It keeps them from disrupting the kitchen, and they really have a grand time."

Black and Gold Gowns Popular

Paris (U.P.).—Plain black trimmed with shining gold has proved to be one of the smartest and most popular combinations of the season.

For afternoon wear, this contrast is shown in a plain dress of sheer black wool worn with a tailored jacket of the same cloth trimmed at the high neck and at the shallow revers with a 2-inch band of bright gold bead embroidery.

A bit more formal is a gown of black crepe that is made with a high-draped neck and a draped, fitted bodice that is tightly fitted at the waist but is not belted.

Evening capes are in black and gold with the cape made of black broadcloth and a V-shaped shoulder yolk embroidered in gold in front and in back.

Colds in Child Cut Immunity To Other Ills

Crowded Schools Boost Danger of Infection, Writer Declares.

By Alice Clarissa Richmond.

NO AMOUNT of regular attendance at school is worth the risk of infection. If the school authorities are not willing to take special precautions to guard the health of the children in their care by sending home youngsters or teachers who have colds, the parents should take the matter in hand, and either refuse to send their children to school when there is risk, or insist on greater precautions in the school itself.

Children's colds are not to be trifled with. Each one lessens the child's resistance and makes him more liable to further infection. Most of the epidemics of measles, whooping cough, scarlet fever, occur toward the latter half of the school year, when the crowded school conditions, the confinement in classrooms and successive colds have lowered the children's vitality.

If every child and every teacher who showed the first symptoms of a cold were obliged to stay at home and go to bed for at least 24 hours, the average record of school attendance would in the end probably be much higher than it is, and the danger of epidemics which often force the school to be closed lessened.

Most of the so-called "children's diseases" such as measles, whooping cough, scarlet fever, begin with symptoms which suggest the common cold.

The child should be put to bed and kept there until the doctor gives him a clean bill of health, or until his parents feel certain that there is no chance of his carrying infection.

Choice of Sauce, Jelly Is Matter of Good Taste

Do you ever wonder what sauce, jelly or catsup to serve with your meat dish? Here are some suggestions that may help you:

Apple sauce goes with roast pork. Mint sauce is served with roast lamb. Cranberry jelly must accompany the turkey.

FAVORITE FOODS of FAMOUS FOLK

By Pattie Ellicott.

ONE OF the most popular of Congressional homes, that of Representative and Mrs. Sol Bloom, of New York, is noted for its genuine hospitality. The entertainments at this home are always featured by some special dish prepared under the direction of its gracious hostess who is well acquainted with all the arts of the epicurean.

When entertaining for a few friends informally Mrs. Bloom often has her cook prepare "jellied beef a la mode." When asked to contribute some of her favorite recipes to the Congressional Cook Book when it was in course of preparation, Mrs. Bloom sent in this one among the group.

It is made as follows:

Jellied Beef a la Mode.

Two and one-half pounds beef, top round, 5 pounds veal bone, potatoes scooped out in ball, carrots cut up, onions small, and green peas cooked.

Brown beef quickly on both sides in frying pan in its own fat; after having cooked the veal bone into a stock, in this place the carrots, onions and potatoes, cook until almost done in the stock, season to taste, after beef has been boiled or steamed in a covered pot until tender, cooking slowly; boil with partly finished vegetables already cooked with the veal bone for about 8 minutes; place beef in deep platter; arrange vegetables around meat, having added green peas; let stock cool a bit; pour over meat; let it chill until it jellies.

Floral Display Offers Variety In Arrangement

Mass or Line Style May Be Used; Should Watch for Spottiness.

THE PRINCIPLES which govern flower arrangements may seem obscure to the novice in this art. One term used often by writers on arrangement is mass. Just what does a mass arrangement mean to the amateur flower lover, who makes arrangements for her home with only good taste as a guide?

A mass arrangement is one which comprises many flowers, closely packed together into a design which reveals little background through the flowers. It contrasts with a line arrangement, which depends for its effect upon few flowers, and is distinguished by an outline which is open and reveals a background of wall or other object.

The line arrangement has been most popular among specialists recently, both in the Japanese manner and the modern, especially the later, in which rhythmic arrangements are possible to fit in with the many extremes of the modern idea of decoration.

Precautions Given.

The mass arrangement, however, is still practical and agreeable to those of us who appreciate the fine beauty and fragrance of flowers. But to those of us who are overmuch inclined to practice this type of flower setting, a few precautions are in order.

The mass arrangement is inclined to be heavy, and forms a solid bank or object of color, and thus should be set only upon a solid support. Although a line arrangement for two or three flowers gracefully set in a low bowl might be attractive on a spindling occasional table, the same table would look grotesquely inadequate for a heavy container of roses or snapdragons.

The centerpiece for the dinner table offers the most inviting situation for a mass arrangement. Here the onlooker has a chance to view the flowers at close range and see just what the arrangement is composed of, and of course, the dinner table is sufficient support.

Watch for Spottiness

Another thing to watch out for is the spotty appearance of the mass arrangement. This is true only when using several types and colors of flowers. It is best to group types of flowers together, so they form a coherent mass in type and color, as several different flowers grouped in a haphazard manner are likely to produce a checker-board effect.

A Woman's NEW YORK

By Alice Hughes.

New York, Jan. 15.

CECIL BEATON'S in town and, as usual, the girls are whirling around in a regular pre-depression dither. This slim, elegant and worldly young Britisher is a pretty good photographer and dabbler in paints, but he also possesses a quality of social and professional salesmanship that sets the more excitable section of our sex here to gabbling like a lot of hen turkeys.

ALICE HUGHES.

Beaton it is who photographs a beautiful girl against a couple of yards of celophane and with her mouth full of camellias. Beaton it is who announces how the girls are going to look pretty soon and just which ones of us will be twirled into the waltz by enraptured males while the rest squat against the wall and pout. He's a devil of a fellow, this young Beaton—good showman, with a flair for what the press will print and for what will run up a high fever among the women.

• • • •

Right now he has been showing paintings and things at a gallery here, featured, of course, by pictures of a Mrs. Wallis Simpson (if I caught the name). Mostly, though, he has been sounding off Beatonisms. Here are some. "The pretty girl era is over. Classic features are a handicap nowadays. Marks of modern beauty are a large mouth, high cheekbones, unashamed laugh wrinkles and a turned-up nose. The out-of-door type of girl is still admired by men with strong reservations. Among the foolishness now permitted are false eyelashes, a tricky coiffure, one insignificant piece of jewelry never taken off. Don't be ashamed of strong, useful-looking hands. Men like 'em."

All right, Cece, old artichoke! But who's this Mrs. Simpson?

GIRL ABOUT TOWN—One of the heroes of the hour, just now, is the 29-year-old Vincente Minnelli, the artist whose production of "The Show Is On" is the last word in beauty and good taste in scenery and costumes. The boy has just left for Hollywood to spatter his magic on some film. Still a very eligible bachelor, Vince is said to have a decided preference right in his own office—the girl being his very beautiful secretary, Marian Harewood.

Chasing coy hair architects around and around their salons, I get the opinion, from many of the harassed lads, that the horrible era of massed ringlets is about to wane, and that we approach a period of simple, more boyish hairdos, or "a la garcon," as we say on the Rue de la Pooh. Good news for the becurled slaves of fashion, I dare say. One of the boys has just done Gertrude Niesen, the radio warbler, in a simple little effect—long bob with the ends turned up, and a straight bang. But he can keep the bang, for all of me . . .

We are about to close the Charm Bracelet sweepstakes. A lot of the local girls-about-town now have so many bangles on their wrists that if they trip over a match they fall on their noses through sheer weight of scrap metal. One of the most interesting collections I've seen is owned by Bessie, the hat-snatcher at El Morocco. High-class patrons of the rich joint have contributed most. Among those who have hung doo-dads on Bessie's slender wrists have been Alfred G. Vanderbilt, Neil Vanderbilt, jr., and Woolworth Donahue. But they're still junk to me, Bessie, old quarter-charmer!

Murray Hill is all excited because our old neighborhood has just opened the first apartment house built on the hill in five years, and mighty nice it is. But we hillbillies aren't like the Hollywood people. We didn't have bands and floodlights for the opening. We just looked at the new pueblo and said, "Well, that's ducky," or something.

'Breakfast' in Any Language, But Different Food

Tea or Coffee, Eggs or Olives, Breakfast Is Still Essential

Americans Have Turned From Heavy Morning Meal to Lighter Fare That Fits Them for Day's Work.

By Rebekah Blake.

PEOPLE THE WORLD OVER have one thing in cmomon, where food is concerned, and that is breakfast. However, the menu varies greatly in different countries because the same foods are not available in all regions and the food price ranges are wide. Then, too, people have different food requirements because of their work and the climate in which they live.

The typical American breakfast has variations, especially because of the changes of weather, but fruit is the distinguishing item of the first meal of the day. The breakfast starts with a solid fruit followed by buttered toast and perhaps a small glass of orange juice, for a vitamin-conscious Nation. Coffee is served piping hot with the toast, and eggs accompanied by bacon are brought in after the fruit is eaten.

The English eat a hearty breakfast. This ordinary meal starts with porridge, the national dish, and is followed by sausage or ham and eggs. The Englishman drinks his tea with his rolls which are accompanied by the inevitable jam or marmalade in a small jar.

Dunking is quite the proper procedure for a Frenchman eating his breakfast. This is no feast for a gourmet, but furnishes the small bit of sustenance needed by the dainty eaters. It consists simply of rolls and coffee. The French eat the rolls only after they have been thoroughly soaked in coffee, and to make this easier, the coffee is served in wide-mouthed bowls.

Light eaters, too, these Chinese. Tea and rice, staples of Chinese food, are on the menu three times a day. The tea is served in cups without handles and the rice comes to the table in a shallow bowl, accompanied, if the eater is more modern, by a spoon instead of the usual chopsticks.

If you are living in a boarding house in Germany, you will have your breakfast brought to your room on a tray as you are expected to eat while you are dressing. The tray probably will hold a cup of coffee, a slice of cake, a roll, and a soft-boiled egg. Not so different from the breakfast eaten by many Americans.

In the colder countries of northern Europe, the people believe in starting the day with a good, satisfying meal. A Norwegian has for breakfast a glass of cream, a piece of sweet Myseost cheese, dried meat and fried fish and a piece of "Knaecke" bread. It is necessary for this meal to be a hearty one as the natives do much strenuous work between breakfast and the next meal and sturdy food builds up their resistance to the cold weather.

In warm Spain you will be served with fruits of the country. The first course is an orange which you cut in two before scooping out the pulp with a spoon. Then come preserved olives, which are speared with a toothpick. You finish the meal with rolls and butter, which are kept in a moist clay container.

The native Russian has a more substantial meal to carry him through his hard day's work. He has hot tea with lemon served in glasses, a variety of breads, almost always including a coarse, black bread, eggs and butter. The more well-to-do Russian will have a can of caviar added to his menu.

In the last 25 years great changes have taken place in the American breakfast. Of late, our breakfast has been only substantial enough to carry us comfortably to the next meal without unnecessary heavy foods to weigh us down and make us lazy through the day. These earlier meals were hard on digestive tracts. Before we became sensible about our eating, enough food often was consumed at one breakfast to keep the ordinary person an entire day. In rural regions large bowls of hot breakfast cereal were served, possibly cold prepared cereal also; then high stacks of pancakes were brought steaming hot to the table, accompanied by fried ham or sausage. In many homes eggs also were served. Of course, there were bread and butter and several kinds of jellies and jams on the table, and coffee and milk. There was very little fruit consumed at these meals. Beefsteak or fried chicken and gravy often were substituted for the hot cakes and sausage.

CHOCOLATE SOUFFLEE WITH FOAMY SAUCE

Melt 1 square chocolate over hot, not boiling, water. Melt 2 tablespoons fat in saucepan, add 2 tablespoons flour, mix well and add ½ cup milk gradually, stirring until mixture is smooth. Add 3 tablespoons powdered sugar and stir over heat until mixture begins to boil. Remove from heat and add to 2 egg yolks beaten until light, and the melted chocolate. Cool, flavor with ½ teaspoon vanilla and fold in 2 egg whites beaten stiff. Turn into greased baking dish which has been sprinkled with sugar and bake at 400 F. for 10 to 15 minutes. Serve immediately after taking from the oven with Foamy sauce.

Foamy Sauce.

Work one-fourth cup butter until creamy, add two-thirds cup confectioners or powdered sugar slowly and add one-fourth teaspoon vanilla and one egg yolk and beat well. Stir over hot water until butter melts, then add to one egg white beaten stiff.

Soup From Leftovers.

Cream soups are easily and economically made by putting leftover vegetables through a strainer and then adding milk and butter. When the lefover vegetables are kept in a modern air-conditioned ice refrigerator one need have no fear that they will dry out before they are used.

Bananas Add 'Touch' To Vegetable Course

Whatever your choice of meat or fowl, serve something different for the vegetable course: cooked bananas! Bananas, baked, broiled or fried, are worthy of your finest feast, the cooking giving them a different and delicious flavor. If your main course is roasted, try baked bananas, served in the skin.

Choose green-tipped or all-yellow bananas for baking. Cut off both ends of each banana. Make a lengthwise slit with a sharp knife through the skin of the banana. Bake in a moderate oven (375 degrees F.) for 15 or 20 minutes or until skins are dark and bananas are soft to the touch. Separate the peel and season with butter and salt, if desired. Serve very hot.

New Code of Etiquette

NEW TIMES require new manners.

So well-bred people like Lois have worked out a code of etiquette to fit our age of movies and automobiles and restaurants.

At the movies with Bill she graciously stands aside while he buys the tickets. Bill, as you see, is proud that she knows how to handle this situation correctly.

Maisie, with a death-grip on her embarrassed escort's arm, thinks that etiquette disappeared with the chaperon. That's why she's never taken to really nice places more than once.

It's the sleek, well-poised girls of Lois' type who are invited again and again to smart restaurants and clubs. Men like to be seen in public with a girl who—without fumbling or hesitation—follows the head waiter to the table, or if the head waiter is not in sight, lets her escort lead the way.

The girl with charming manners never gives her order directly to the waiter but tells her escort what she'd like. She never spreads her napkin out like a circus tent but lays it across her lap in a double or triple fold.

She causes no confusion at elevator doors because she knows that the woman deftly precedes her escort in and out of elevators.

Interrupted Feeding Termed Bad for Baby

Interruptions in fedeing of infants may cause them to develop a psychosis which leads them eventually to indulge in excessive talking, drinking and smoking, according to Dr. Ernest E. Hadley, director for biological science in the School of Psychiatry, Washington.

Dr. Hadley in a recent address said interruptions in feeding exasperate a baby and cause him to become resentful. In adult life an inter-personal hostility shows up in many curious and remote ways, often causing a person to become a "windbag" in conversation, a heavy smoker or a heavy drinker.

Tea Sandwiches.

Tea sandwiches—which are a cross between hors d'oeuvers and real sandwiches—have become increasingly popular. They came into being when men challenged women as the Nation's chief tea-drinkers, and demanded more sturdy fare than the petits fours that used to range themselves alongside feminine tea cups.

Milk and Cheese Lead List of Calcium Foods

If your doctor advises you to eat heavily of foods containing calcium and you leave him, wondering what are calcium foods, anyway, here are some suggestions for you to follow.

Milk and cheese stand high on the list. If these distress you, try cauliflower, dried figs, dried beans, oranges and spinach. Smaller quantities may be obtained from celery, carrots, eggs, meats, string beans and many other foods.

Rail Financing Inquiry Halted To Obtain Data

Whitney Promises Wheeler Records of Exchange Will Be Furnished.

By the Associated Press.

The Senate Railroad Finance Investigating Committee adjourned its hearings unexpectedly yesterday when Chairman Wheeler (Democrat), Montana, announced he had been unable to obtain certain memoranda from the New York Stock Exchange files.

Wheeler tentatively scheduled further hearings for January 25.

Turning to Richard Whitney, former exchange president, who had been called as a witness, he said sharply:

"In the future one of two things is going to happen when we ask for records of the exchange. Either you bring them all down here, or you give us a chance to copy them."

Whitney assured him the material would be available whenever the committee wanted it.

Loan Explained.

Evidence that a J. P. Morgan banking syndicate "rescued" the Van Sweringen empire in 1930 was unfolded earlier before the committee.

William C. Potter, board chairman of the Guaranty Trust Co. of New York, testified part of a $39,500,000 loan made by the Morgan group was used to close out a $19,000,000 Van Sweringen account with Paine, Webber & Co., New York stock brokers.

Describing the situation as "very delicate," he said this action kept the Van Sweringen interests from "dumping a million shares of Allegheny Corporation stock on the market" to protect their margin requirements.

Consequences Stressed.

"Unloading" of such a huge block of stock might have started a general market decline, Potter explained.

"If you emphasize the word 'might,' decidedly so," Potter answered.

Earlier Francis Ward Paine, of Paine, Webber & Co., testified the Van Sweringen accounts made up "20 to 25 per cent" of the firm's total business, and that they were "in a state of unusual tension" in 1930.

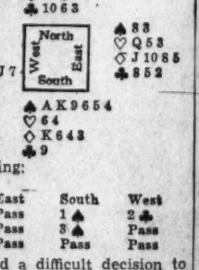
MRS. ELY CULBERTSON ON CONTRACT

Pessimism.

The man who always carries an umbrella must be an excellent Bridge player. A great deal of the difference between a winning and a losing player lies in the precautions which the former takes to safeguard an apparently "sure" contract. The South player today, figuratively speaking, left his umbrella at home and got caught in the rain.

North, dealer.
Neither side vulnerable.



The bidding:

North	East	South	West
1 ♡	Pass	1 ♠	2 ♣
Pass	Pass	3 ♠	Pass
4 ♠	Pass	Pass	Pass

North had a difficult decision to make after South's jump to three spades. His spade support was not such as to make him enthusiastic about a raise; but three notrump was out of the question because of lack of a club stopper and the red suits were only four cards in length. Thus his decision to bid four spades.

West opened the King of clubs and upon noting East's deuce, correctly decided that his partner had started with three cards in the suit. He could have continued the suit safely enough, but had no desire to give up control of the hand so quickly. He knew his King of hearts was worthless unless his partner had the Queen and therefore decided on a deceptive lead, which, to tell the truth, should not have succeeded.

At the second trick, therefore, he led the eight of hearts. South studied the combined hands and decided that the diamonds were solid and his only losers were a spade, a heart and a club already taken by the opponents. Fearing a short heart suit he went up with dummy's Ace and took out the trumps. When diamonds failed to break normally, he could not make his contract.

South should have realized that since there were more hearts than diamonds out against him there was less chance of one player's holding a singleton heart than a singleton diamond. Since he had to lose a heart at some stage, he might just as well have finessed dummy's nine at the second trick. Had he done so, he could have taken a second heart finesse when the diamonds failed to break. This would have netted him a discard for his losing diamond and would have enabled him to make his contract.

Roach Hearts

If we had a true appreciation of the importance of science, this story would be slugged "drugs and insects," but being essentially a curiosity-seeker, we just can't help playing up the fact that a Department of Agriculture scientist has discovered that periodically the hearts of cockroaches run backwards.

Dr. J. Franklin Yeager is the scientist who, for the last year, has been conducting experiments to test reactions of various drugs upon insects. Up to now Dr. Yeager has been trying to perfect a method for carrying on the experiment.

To observe the heart action of the cockroach, Dr. Yeager places the roach on a slide and peels off the thin layers until the heart is exposed to view under the microscope. This dissecting takes from 15 to 20 minutes. It was while observing different roach hearts that Yeager noticed periodically there would come a complete pause of heart action and then the beats would reverse themselves. Why? Yeager can't say.

WPA officials have decided to furlough employes dismissed instead of handing them outright terminations. First application of this new policy came yesterday with the 50-odd social research workers who were let out. The furlough procedure will enable employes to acquire a modified civil service status when WPA goes under the merit system.

One other question that popped into our minds while talking to Dr. Yeager was how and where he got the roaches. No, the procurement division does not advertise for bids. Whenever the laboratory supply of roaches runs low, Yeager simply visits several roach-infested business spots in town. Yeager has a regular list of establishments to draw upon, the proprietors being only too anxious to have him play the pied piper for their roaches.

Babcock and Carmody

Col. George D. Babcock's recent appointment as engineer in management attached to the office of Deputy REA Administrator John M. Carmody recalls the story of how Carmody shanghaied Babcock into the Government service back in 1934.

Carmody, at that time, was chief engineer at WPA and wanted Babcock, then in North Carolina, as his assistant. Carmody telephoned Babcock one day and asked if he'd like the job. Babcock said no, but agreed to think it over. The following day Carmody called again and the surprised Babcock exclaimed:

"Do I have to think it over that fast?"

"There's a 12:15 train to Washington today," replied Carmody, "Hop on it and come up to my office and let's talk the thing over."

When Babcock arrived the following morning he was told that Carmody had been called out of town, but had asked Col. Babcock to spend a little time in an adjoining office, looking over papers and things, so he would be able to decide whether or not he wanted the job.

Scarcely had Babcock sat down at his desk when a stenographer came in, hung up her hat and coat, took out pencil and pad and asked whether there was any dictation. Almost before he knew it, Babcock was giving dictation, and he never has been able to break away from Uncle Sam since.

The threatening picketing of the Justice Department may not materialize—Gardner Jackson has withdrawn from active participation in the business and the Justice Lodge 21 boys are wondering whether they can carry on alone.

Radios

In announcing the start today of a series of Saturday afternoon radio broadcasts, the Department of Commerce is the thirteenth Government agency to take up the air in regular fashion.

The CCC, Office of Education and Smithsonian Institution have gone in for the most elaborate programs, but Agriculture and the Children's Bureau have well-developed radio services; Federal Housing has a "master builders" program; the Library of Congress a musical broadcast, while the Park Service at one time did the various national parks in a radio series.

Resettlement, REA, Social Security Board and the Indian Bureau are also using the air regularly, most of their broadcasts, however, going out through local stations. A typical arrangement for these local broadcasts is that of the Indian Bureau, which has 170 small independent stations co-operating. Every week the bureau mails out a new script on some other phase of the bureau's work, the stations using the material any time during the week following. Script No. 5 in the Indian Bureau's series—"The History of Indian and White Man Relationships," went out Tuesday.

Tomorrow's Office of Education-Smithsonian broadcast will be on printing, which, of course, means a flock of human interest stories on old Chinese printers, Mr. Gutenberg, of Bible-fame, and Ben Franklin.

A prominent diplomat was responsible for clinching the police case against George Garcia, the "well-dressed burglar," it was learned yesterday.

This diplomat returned from a New Year's Eve party to find his apartment in disorder. Fifty dollars and a pair of foreign-made scissors, part opf a desk set, had been taken.

Garcia, a 25-year-old Cuban waiter, who told police he once toyed with the idea of trying to steal the famous Hope diamond from Mrs. Edward B. McLean, was arrested January 7 as he was on his way for cocktails. He was not arrested, as first reported, in the cocktail lounge of the Mayflower Hotel.

The arresting officers were Detective Sergt. Joseph Shimon and Detective Sergt. Harry Brittan, who picked up the Cuban on the strength of a description given by persons who had seen him, usually in a dinner jacket, roaming through the hallways of hotels and apartment houses where robberies later were reported.

Identifies Scissors.

The day following Garcia's arrest, the diplomat, who had reported the burglary of his apartment, was asked to visit police headquarters. There he was shown a pair of shears that had been found in Garcia's apartment in the 1700 block of N street northwest.

The diplomat identified the shears. Police fitted them into his imported desk set and Garcia admitted the crime.

Besides this, detectives found a strip of celluloid in Garcia's sock. To them this was highly significant. Several pieces of celluloid had been found outside the apartment of Mrs. Helen Goldnamer at the Shoreham Hotel, and it was obvious to police that these had been used to "jimmy" the door. Mrs. Goldnamer reported that she was robbed of $3,500 in jewels and $500 in cash.

The arrest of Garcia nine days ago was kept a secret by police until they could locate where the Cuban had sold his loot.

Boasted of Exploits.

Three days after his arrest, Garcia began to boast about his exploits, according to the detectives, and gradually they got from him the details of 18 of his jobs. Altogether he is suspected of more than 50 robberies and his loot in money and jewelry is believed by the police to be between $35,000 and $50,000.

Word came from New York yesterday about a raid on a jewelry store in New York suspected of being Garcia's "fence." Gems valued at $10,000, and believed to be stolen from prominent Washingtonians, were recovered.

One piece of jewelry of that recovered in New York was a gold mesh bag bearing the inscription "JWS to JHS '36."

Detective Shimon, who had flown from here to New York, aided New York detectives in the raid. He called Inspector Bernard W. Thomnson, chief of detectives, last night and told him that he was about to stage a second raid on the suspected fence.

Garcia was fond of perfume, and he is suspected of stealing $400 worth from Mrs. Ellen Dodge, of 2131 Florida avenue northwest. Detective Brittan says that some of this was found in his apartment.

Some of Jobs Listed.

He also is suspected of having stolen $500 in jewelry from the Wardman Hotel apartment of A. E. Giegengack, Public Printer.

According to police, Garcia has admitted to robbing the homes of the following:

Mrs. Ellen Dodge, 2131 Florida avenue northwest; Elva Houseman, 1716 H street northwest; Rose King, 1808 Connecticut avenue northwest; Miss Mauricea Taxey, 1901 Sixteenth street northwest; Frank Tobin, 1844 Belmont road; Alfred C. Linstrom, 1809 Belmont road; Virginia McDonald, 1900 Belmont road; Margaret Clark, 1712 Sixteenth street, and Marion B. Meakins, 1215 Sixteenth street.

Police described Garcia as "extremely egotistical." In his apartment, they said, they found a copy of a letter which he had written to a national magazine. The letter was an indignation protest against an article in the magazine titled, "Latins are Louzy Lovers."

First Lady Pays Visit to Children's Hospital

Executive Committee Has Meeting Here to Plan Richmond Session.

When Parent-Teacher Association delegates from all sections of the country meet next May in Richmond, Va., their discussions will be centered on "The Place of the Home in the Community," Mrs. B. F. Langworthy, national president, announced yesterday following a meeting of the executive committee.

Nearly 1,000 representatives of associations in every State are expected to go to the Virginia capital, Mrs. Hugh Bradford, Sacramento, Calif., said, reporting for the convention management committee.

Preliminary plans, made at the meeting of the P.-T. A. executives include a talk by Judge Florence Allen, of Ohio, and a tree-planting ceremony in honor of the founders and pioneer workers of the national congress. The fortieth anniversary of the establishment of the work of the congress is being celebrated throughout 1937, and will be particularly observed at the forty-first convention.

Mrs. Louis R. Fulton, of Wichita, Kans., proposed revisions to the national P.-T. A. by-laws for approval by the executive committee and for consideration by the national board of managers at Richmond in the spring.

The Friday afternoon session was interrupted for a social hour at the Thomas Circle Club, during which the board of managers of the District of Columbia were hostesses to the executive committee members at tea. Presidents of local Parent-Teacher groups were also guests.

Detectives Unearth 'Little Monte Carlo'

Raiding what was described as a "miniature Monte Carlo" for Government employes in a fashionable apartment house in the 1900 block of F street northwest, plainclothesmen last night arrested two men and charged them with permitting gambling.

Six patrons in the establishment, who were gathered around a roulette wheel or playing cards, were released.

D. C. Police Hunt $6,700 Gem Thief

Washington police last night were searching for a colored purse-snatcher who robbed a Baltimore woman of $6,700 worth of jewelry.

The victim, Mrs. Dorothy Ruhl, reported the theft Wednesday. She said a colored man leaped on the running board of her automobile in Baltimore and took the pocketbook while she was riding with her twin nephews. Baltimore police believe the thief left that city, headed for Washington.

Vampire Bats and Tiger Cats No Terror to Gloria Hollister

Vampire bats, tiger cats, ant-eaters, three-toed sloths and other strange beasts hold no terrors for Gloria Hollister, young woman scientist, who last night in a lecture before the National Geographic Society showed that even leading an exploring expedition into tropical jungles is no longer exclusively a man's job.

Penetrating by canoe and afoot deep into the hinterland of British Guiana, just north of the Equator in South America, Miss Hollister's expedition also collected specimens of the rare hoatzin, a bird which is the last surviving link between birds and reptiles. On the wing-tips of the young hoatzins grow claws, strange survivals of the prehistoric past, and these are used as aids in climbing before the wing feathers grow.

Like other modern explorers, too, Miss Hollister's expedition also took to the air, making aerial photographs of more than 40 waterfalls, many of them previously unknown.

Specimens of guppies were found swimming contentedly in the gutters of New Amsterdam, Surinam, the Netherlands colony just east of British Guiana. Strange are the red-tailed rivulus fish, which live in pools of surface water, high above the banks of the Potaro River. They have the unfishlike desire to jump or climb out of water, and can stick to the sides of a pail or other receptacle in which they may be carried.

Miss Hollister's expedition represented the New York Zoological Society, of which she is a staff member in the Department of Tropical Research.

First Lady Visitor to Hospital Where Charity Fund Is Spent

Children Helped by Proceeds of President's Birthday Balls Are Observed in Therapeutic Tank, Learning to Walk Again.

Mrs. Franklin D. Roosevelt yesterday viewed, at first hand, some of the work being accomplished by the funds derived from the nation-wide celebration of the birthday of her distinguished husband. Accompanied by a group of members of the Board of Lady Visitors of Children's Hospital, the First Lady visited the hospital, watched with interest methods used for restoring action to little legs atrophied by infantile paralysis, and posed with some of the patients.

Children's Hospital, the only institution in Washington treating infantile paralysis, gets Washington's share of funds derived from the President's birthday ball. With the proceeds of last year's ball, the hospital was enabled to enlarge its quarters, relocate the therapeutic tank, in which the children learn to walk again, and generally facilitate the work of conducting the clinic, which is held twice weekly.

Mrs. Roosevelt was escorted through the hospital by Mrs. Frederick H. Brooke, chairman of the board of lady visitors; Mrs. Herbert Seymour Howard, Mrs. Andrew Saul and Mrs. Wilson Lee and C. Melvin Sharpe, of the President's Birthday Ball committee. Miss Hattie Gibson, superintendent of the hospital, acted as guide.

Mrs. Roosevelt was greatly interested in the tank, a huge steel receptacle filled with warm salt water. The children are placed in the tank and the buoyancy of the water helps them walk without too great a strain on unused muscles. Gradually, as they increase their ability to walk, they are given a few steps outside the tank and eventually walk again. Mrs. Roosevelt also was interested in the various therapeutic devices for exercising the hands and arms. It was regular clinic day and a large number of children were present for treatment.

Following the visit to the clinic, Mrs. Roosevelt made a tour of the hospital, even going to the new boiler rooms and inspecting the heating plant.

Proceeds of the President's Birthday Ball remaining in Washington again will be devoted to the work of the hospital this year. The ball is to be held in seven leading hotels on the night of January 30. One ticket at $1.50 admits to any or all of the hotels and Mrs. Roosevelt has promised to appear at each one during the evening.

210-Lb. Bandit Jailed in Effort To Rob Store

A 210-pound bandit, who claimed to be a marine stationed here, was arrested last night after he had beaten and attempted to hold up Emanuel Michelson, of the 2100 block of Pennsylvania avenue northwest.

The robber, clad in civilian clothes, ordered $40 worth of merchandise when he entered Michelson's establishment.

"I have to go in the back and open my money bag," he told the merchant.

A moment later he called from the rear and asked Michelson to help him. When Michelson refused, he attacked him with a piece of lead pipe, wrapped in brown paper.

Michelson wrested free of the robber's grip, and ran shouting into the street.

Precinct Detective R. J. Blick, off duty, heard the trouble call on his radio, hastened to the scene and collared the robber, who registered as Wilhelm Luckhard, 35. A private physician treated Michelson for cuts to his head.

Two bandits held up Henry Louis, a driver for the Merchants Transfer Co., 900 block of E street northwest, as he was making a delivery in the 3700 block of Connecticut avenue last night, and escaped with more than $90.

Hazen, Allen Appointment To Be Rushed

Senator King Promises Quick Action on Commissioners.

Two District Heads to Serve Without Salary Until Approval.

Prompt action on the reappointment of Washington's two civilian Commissioners was promised yesterday by Chairman King, of the Senate District Committee, after nominations had been sent to the Senate by President Roosevelt.

Senator King said that a committee meeting will be called early next week and that the appointments will be placed before the Senate immediately thereafter.

Commissioners Melvin C. Hazen and George E. Allen probably will be called before the committee, but no public hearing is planned.

Although Allen began to talk of resigning early last summer, his reappointment was excepted when he elected to serve out his term. Hazen had never given any indication of quitting the District service, and his reappointment was assured.

Allen Comparative Newcomer.

As the terms of the two Commissioners under the last appointments expired yesterday, the District heads will continue to serve without salary until their reappointments are confirmed by the Senate.

Allen, though a newcomer four years ago, has distinguished himself by his administration of the successive relief organizations and his two incognito trips over the country to obtain first-hand information on unemployed and on the WPA. A former hotel man, he is one of the youngest men to head the District government.

Hazen has been in the District government for more than 45 years. He was District surveyor for many years prior to his appointment as Commissioner.

Allen and Hazen first were appointed to their jobs while Congress was in recess, on November 14, 1933. They were reappointed when Congress convened and confirmed by the Senate on January 15, 1934. Their new terms will continue through the second Roosevelt Administration.

Hazen "Grateful."

Between congratulatory messages by telephone and personal calls, Commissioner Hazen found time yesterday to comment for himself and fellow members of the board on the President's action.

"I am deeply grateful to think the President had confidence enough in the District Commissioners to nominate us for reappointment," Hazen said.

Lauding Commissioners Allen and Sultan for their "excellent co-operation" during past years, Hazen said he had no definite plans for the future.

Thomas Lodge, youthful president of the Federation of Citizens Associations, joined other Washington leaders in expressing pleasure at the renominations.

"The present Board of Commissioners has served the city well during its administration," Lodge said. "It is far better to reappoint the board than to bring in outsiders who are not familiar with local problems. Commissioner Hazen is an able chairman and Commissioner Allen has shown excellent aptitude for organization."

Boy Gang Hunted In Entries, Thefts At Three Schools

A band of small boys about grammar school age are believed by police to be responsible for ransacking three public schools and stealing a French oboe valued at $100.

First report that a school building had been entered came from Mrs. Josephine C. Smith, principal of Sumner School at Seventeenth and M streets northwest. She told police entry had been made by means of the fire escape. Keys to the building were stolen from her office, she said.

Many rooms, she added, showed evidence of having been entered but nothing was missing. A small boy's cap was found on her desk yesterday morning.

Miss Edith A. Lyons, principal of the Wilson School in the 2400 block of Seventeenth street northwest, reported to the Third Precinct that she suspected small boys of breaking the window in a lavatory to gain admission to the school.

At the Cardoza High School, Ninth and Rhode Island avenue northwest, Felix Weir, a music teacher said an oboe valued at $100 was taken.

6 Men Seized In D. C. Drive On Dope Ring

U. S. Agents, Police Act Together in Raids on Retailers.

Climaxing a preinauguration drive against narcotics peddlers who are alleged to supply drugs to pickpockets and other criminals, Federal narcotics agents in co-operation with police yesterday arrested six men and charged them with the sale and possession of drugs.

The prisoners, officers said, are known narcotics retailers, who sell their drugs in $1, $2 and $5 packages to addicts, many of whom are underworld characters.

Directing the drive were Federal Commissioner of Narcotics H. J. Anslinger and Director of Narcotics for the District Area Boyd Martin.

Martin said last night that the drive had been going on throughout the Washington area since Thanksgiving with an eye to the approaching Inauguration, which would probably bring a group of pickpockets and other thieves from surrounding territory to prey on the crowds.

"Most pickpockets use narcotics," he explained.

Hospitals Ask Special Drive For Donations

Chest Committee Told of Indicated Deficit of $90,000.

Meeting informally with a special committee from the Community Chest, representatives of the nine hospitals affiliated with the Chest yesterday asked permission to put on a supplemental campaign to meet a deficit incurred because the Chest could not pay for all services rendered Chest patients last year.

The hospitals represented were Emergency, Episcopal Eye, Ear and Throat, Georgetown University, George Washington University, Columbia, Children's Garfield, Providence and National Homeopathic.

Representatives called attention to the inability of the Chest to pay some $90,000 for service to patients certified by the Central Admittance Bureau for Hospitals in 1936. They stated that, through failure to achieve its goal this year, the Chest has been able to apportion only the same amount, $276,000, to hospitals as was apportioned in 1935. They declared that this indicates a deficit of at least $90,000 in Chest payments to hospitals again this year and said that increasing demands of a growing city might increase that deficit.

Attention was called to the increasing number of "flu" cases in Washington. Attention also was called to the increased population of the city, and the fact that the Central Admitting Bureau, in the first nine months of 1936, certified more than twice as many cases for hospitalization as were certified in the whole of 1935. There were no indications, it was declared, that this number would grow less. Rather, it was said, an increase could be anticipated.

As yesterday's meeting was informal, no action could be taken. The request will be referred to the hospitals for board action and any official recommendation will be made to the executive committee of the Chest. The question will then go before the board of trustees for final action.

Winthrop Alumnae.

A rally of alumnae of Winthrop College, Rock Hill, S. C., living in Washington will be held at 4 o'clock this afternoon at Tabard Inn, 1739 N street northwest, with Mrs. Fred C. Lawrence, president of the State Federation of Women's Clubs, as the principal speaker.

Merit Plan Expansion Is Promised

Congressmen, Officials Pledge Support in Campaign.

Civil Service Week Is Observed by Group of U. S. Workers.

Determination to extend the merit system throughout the Government service was expressed last night by Congressmen, labor leaders and Government officials participating in a radio broadcast observing Civil Service Week.

The American Federation of Government Employees and the National Federation of Postoffice Clerks were commended for their efforts toward improvement of working condition in the Government service by William Green, president of the American Federation of Labor.

"Civil service legislation or the civil service status of Government employes could not have reached the point attained by thousands of Government workers if there had been no organizations of Government workers to lead them in the fight for enactment of civil service laws and for the maintenance and protection of civil service statutes," said Green.

Sees Further Progress.

Representative James M. Mead, chairman of the House Committee on Postoffice and Post Roads, predicted that great progress will be made during the present Congress in extending the merit system in the postal service.

J. M. Donaldson, deputy first assistant postmaster general, praised Postmaster General Farley for placing more career men in key positions in the Postoffice Department during his administration than any other Postmaster General.

Mrs. Lucille McMillan and Harry B. Mitchell, members of the Civil Service Commission, told of plans for perfecting and speeding up machinery for rating examination papers. Both praised the loyal service of women Government workers. Mitchell predicted that the number of Government employes will decrease with the return of normal business.

For Career Service.

Mrs. Bernice Heffner, secretary of the American Federation of Government Employes, said it is the ambition of the union to make the Government service a career service which will attract the Nation's most ambitions and able young men and women.

Representative Ramspeck, chairman of the House Civil Service Committee, said the civil service promotes efficiency, results in better legislation and helps to hold down the cost of Government.

Gilbert Hyatt, legislative representative of the National Federation of Postoffice Clerks, said no machine will ever be invented to substitute for the training, the uncanny memory and the high morale which constitutes the equipment of the postal employes.

More than 200 men and women gathered in the dining room of the Ambassador Hotel to participate in the broadcast which was heard over Station WOL.

Neighbors Object To Horse Walking In Parlor of Home

Joe, a lowly cart horse, with the spavins, who lives in the parlor of a house at 1342 Harrison avenue southeast, and believes in minding his own business as long as he gets his oats, became the object of a police "investigation" yesterday.

Neighbors of Joe complained that his habit of walking about the room at night was keeping them awake—but worst of all—they objected to his neighing in the "wee sma'" hours of morning.

W. C. Bracy and W. L. Rollins, of the Fifth Precinct, who investigated" Joe, said he was well mannered "despite his spavins." His owner, they learned, was Bonnie Middleton, colored huckster, who is wintering in the workhouse at Occoquan. Meanwhile, Joe is being fed by Middleton's relations, neighbors said. And for a while at least he is safe.

For Grown-ups As Well As Children

One doctor says of milk: "It is the best kind of a 'shock absorber' for the grown-up . . . Milk supplements a diet that may be deficient in one or more respects, so the practice of using at least a pint of milk daily in the diet of the adult is a most excellent thing from the standpoint of maintaining good health."

EMBASSY DAIRY

In HOLLYWOOD With Jimmy Fiddler

Idol Chatter.

HOLLYWOOD, Jan. 15.

Near the roof of Paramount's stage 6 are the carved initials "F. MacM." Fred MacMurray nicked them there years ago when he was a studio laborer. Merle Oberon and Norma Shearer have that well-brushed look. Peas from the same pod: Fred Astaire (wearing a derby) and Stan Laurel. I can hardly resist temptation to write "graves" after the name of Dudley Digges. Message to the Purity League: Margot Grahame is having her dressfronts altered as you suggested.

NORMA SHEARER

Nutshell description of Marlene Dietrich: Figuresque. Critic's comment I never expect to read: "Take your kiddies to See Mae West's new picture!"

Martha Raye reminds me of a barefoot boy on hot paving. Odd how Wallace Beery always finds an excuse to visit the East just when new airpane models are exhibited. Studios invariably promise toys used in pictures starring children to the youngsters, else they pout and spoil scenes. Most military figure in the colony: Lewis Stone. Jane Withers dubbed director James Tingling "Mr. Ting-aling-a-ling;" now half of Hollywood follows suit.

There is nothing quite so formal in this colony as dinner in the brown-and-white dining room of the Crawford-Tones. Formal, that is, until the swanky looking butler arrives to serve you and you notice the blue and red anchor tatooed on his thumb. That anchor weighs heavily on formality.

Here is a funny one at Bing Crosby's expense: The Groaner recently installed a direct-to-track telephone service in his home, so he might sit in his den and hear race results without delay. The other evening, about 10 o'clock, Dick Arlen dropped in for a night-cap, and there was Crosby tinkering with the mechanical doo-dads. Arlen eyed him for a minute, then cracked: "What are you doing? Waiting for your horse to come in?"

Calling All Stars

New York, Jan. 15.

LIBBY HOLMAN: Here's the real reason why, for that party you gave, you were unable to hire the quartet which sings with Benny Goodman's band. The quartet was instructed to cancel that engagement, by Goodman's radio sponsors—who are your ex-in-laws, the Reynolds family! . . . Will Hays: Here's another headache for you—similar to the "It Can't Happen Here" yarn which you banned from the screen. Fox is deciding this week on the purchase of the movie rights for Sidney Kingsley's anti-war play, "Ten Million Ghosts."

ELI YALE: Larry "Whataman" Kelly, your gridiron hero of last season, entertained at the Yale Club reception last night. He was so good that an alumnus, who is an official of Universal Films, will sign him for a forthcoming movie.

EDDIE CANTOR: Your agents, the William Morris office, have a new client. She's the widow of David Freedman — whose suit against you is still pending . . . Pol. Com. Valentine: The N. Y. U. Sophomore Beer-fest will have strip-teasers and other stage-accourtrements. No faculty members will be admitted, because the collegiates want to be raided—so that the resultant publicity will make next year's Fest a financial success.

WALTER HUSTON: Yesterday a newspaper here carried a six-column spread on its editorial page, describing you as "Typical American." That's pretty good—for a guy who was born in Toronto, Canada.

STALIN: Donald Ogden Stewart was at El Morocco discussing communism. Paul Palmer, editor of the American Mercury, thought the speech so funny that he offered to publish it if Stewart would get it down in writing. Stewart said he'd do it on one condition—that Palmer embrace communism . . . Curtiss-Wright: Have you as yet delivered those 1,500 plane-motors contracted for by the Russian government? . . . Rudy Vallee: Your alma mater, Yale, wants you to play at this year's junior prom. Is it true that, alma mater or not, you're asking $6,000 for the engagement?

"One in a Million" and Ace Stage Bill Combine to Form Top Capitol Program

Sonja HenieMakesAuspicious Debut as Both Skater and Ingenuous Actress

Century-Fox picturization of a story and screen play by Leonard Praskins and Mark Kelly, with music and lyrics by Lew Pollack and Sidney D. Mitchell, featuring Sonja Henie, Adolphe Menjou, Don Ameche, Ned Sparks, Jean Hersholt, the Three Ritz Brothers, Borrah Minevitch and His Harmonica Rascals, Arline Judge, Dixie Dunbar, Leah Ray, Shirley Deane, Montague Love, Albert Conti, JJulius Tannen and a strikingly effective girl band. Directed by Sidney Landfield. Previewed Tuesday, January 12.

As has been indicated in this space on a previous occasion, this subject had a devastating effect upon this commentator when he previewed it in a "cold" projection room last Tuesday. It seems to me to be possessed of an extraordinary number of superior assets in the matter of providing light, musical and sophisticated entertainment.

BELL

Probably I am what the vernacular of "show business" dubs a "sucker" for this sort of thing, but when music, comedy, a reasonably sound story and a cast of superlative merit all are combined in one picture it strikes this typewriter that perhaps something a little unusual has come along. That is what has happened here.

It Has Everything.

"One in a Million" is a picture that has everything, as the saying goes, to satisfy the tastes of those who can do with a bit of tomfoolery, now and again. The basis of the story, however, is not essentially ridiculous. It concerns an honest and rather dramatic attempt of a young woman to gain Olympic recognition as the best ice figure skater in the world. Sonja Henie, the star of the film—and it is her first—of course, is perfectly cast in the role which she has lived in real life. But, beyond that, there is the suspense created by a clever juggling of the circumstances surrounding her right to compete as an amateur. There is, furthermore, the tragic past of her father, who was deprived of the honors he craves so dearly for his gifted daughter.

Out of this sound foundation of drama, Leonard Praskins and Mark Kelly have evolved a screen plan tha does not deny itself the luxury of rich musical and comic embellishment.

The Ritz Brothers, whom I deem among the foremost of the contemporary theater's laughmakers, are in top form in this picture and contribute a series of songs that are knockouts and a bullfight on ice that is one of the comic gems of which the cinema may eternally boast.

Borrah Minevitch and His Harmonica Rascals add further fun to the goings-on, with their incomparable mouth organ musicianship. There have been a good many harmonica bands, on and off, but Borrah and his lads still are the top.

Cast Is Superlative.

However, these are merely the trimmings of a musical production that is exceedingly well played by a cast of distinction. Sonja Henie, making her screen debut, is primarily the world's greatest ice skater, but she also betrays a personal beauty, a poise and a moderate ability to "act" that seems to give promise of as much of a future before the cameras as she might wish. Her skating is nothing less than miraculous. As I have remarked before, I grew up on the ice, but never have mistrusted that anyone could perform the feats on blades that the diminutive Miss Henie achieves.

Cast in the role of her father is Jean Hersholt, one of Hollywood's most reliable actors, and in comedy roles are Adolphe Menjou, doing much the same sort of thing as he did in "Sing, Baby, Sing;" Arline Judge, as his wife; Ned Sparks, the staccato sour-puss, and Don Ameche who mingles comedy with the romantic interest of the piece and shows vast improvement over anything he has heretofore done.

Then there are Dixie Dunbar, who doesn't get much chance to dance; Leah Ray, who sings a bit; Montagu Love as the film's potential "threat" and the others whose names appear in the small-type paragraph preceding these comments.

Velez and Weissmuller.

On the stage of Loew's Capitol this week, the headline attraction is provided by Lupe Velez and her stalwart aquatic star husband, Johnny Weissmuller, who do wonders with material that is not especially well contrived. The volcanic Senorita Valez, as goes without saying, carries the act, sings effectively and dances a rumba that is really a rumba. Johnny takes a whirl at a song, but doesn't get off the flat of his feet to do a bit of dancing, great as the temptation must be with Miss Velez so utterly entrancing in her gyrations.

The secondary attraction, or perhaps it should be designated the coheadline act, is furnished by the same Borrah Minevitch we have been talking about in the picture and His Harmonica Rascals. They do on the stage approximately what they do in the celluloid and score the same overwhelming success they always garner in this man's town.

Then there is Frank Gaby, comedian, ventriloquist, singer and all-around fine entertainer, who acts as a sort of master of ceremonies for the whole gay shebang. The Elida Dancers do their customary artistic routines and the stage show ends with a patriotic tribute to President Roosevelt that elicits rounds of applause.

The usual house auxiliaries and Phil Lampkin overture complete an ace Inaugural week bill.

"MORE THAN A SECRETARY." Columbia Pictures' filmization of a story by Matt Taylor, Ethel Hill and Aben Kendall, adapted to the screen by Dale Van Every and Lynn Starling, featuring Jean Arthur, George Brent, Lionel Stander, Ruth Donnelly, Reginald Denny, Dorothea Kent, Charles Halton and Geriadine Hall. Directed by Alfred E. Green. Reviewed Friday afternoon by Mary Harris.

Being "More Than a Secretary" offers a shining new tangent on that great art of the office—marrying the boss.

Sparring briskly for equal attention is a crack stage show, Benny Davis' newest collection of embryo and not-so-embryo stars, with the addition of that pair of sure show-stoppers—Shea and Raymond, in themselves, ladeez and gentlemen, worth the price of two admissions.

If you don't believe that a girl can look cute in horn-rimmed specs, the answer is to take a peek at Jean Arthur as she demonstrates the fine points of being more than a secretary. Li'l Missy Jean, who has had more than her share of the wrong breaks in Hollywood, is by way of proving the axiom about the practical impracticability of keeping a good girl down. As they say at Hialeah, she "rates bang up."

Freshness of Plot.

Business schools and their product and the mechanics of health magazining lend a freshness to the plot of "More Than a Secretary." Jean Arthur is introduced as one of those long-suffering young women who dictate "The sly brown fox jumps over the lazy dog" to would-be typists. But a spring breeze comes in the dusty classroom, and she thinks about all her dumbest scholars who turn up with silver fox capes and new husbands—so she answers in person the next request for a stenog, a request from their most difficult client, the nut owner of a health magazine. You've guessed it—he's the ineffable George Brent. (We nearly said Georgie.)

From then on it's a merry tangle, with Jean coping more or less successfully with one of her former pupils (played no end cutely by Dorothea Kent), who also believes in being more than a secretary but is deluded by no such foolishness as getting infatuated with one boss.

The show definitely belongs to Jean Arthur, with Dorothea Kent and Lionel Stander (some day he'll be known as prominently as Lionel Barrymore) figuring also as fine show people. George Brent, if you ask us? Well, don't ask us.

Benny Clicks Again.

If Benny Davis had physically the long nose for talent that he has intuitively, his proboscis would stretch from F to G streets. His newest collection of boys and gals is up to the Davis scratch, which means as Benny would say, that it is "phenomenal, sensational, and terrific." At any rate, it is strictly tops—all the way.

Among the smart young folks presented by Benny are Vera, who sings in the Russian manner (but needs a fresher number); Shirley Ross (who dances her tootsies steamingly), Paul Regan (nifty on imitations, but better on Joe E. Brown than the President), Miss Bratz (we couldn't catch her first name, but diamond stars to I'il Bratzie for juggling and tap dancing at one and the same time), the Manhattanites (goody-goody on naughty-naughty songs but so sad while waiting in Bennie's line-up), Robert Baxter (best songster since some grand guy whose name we can't remember with Paul Whiteman), Schwartz Trio (if Adolf Hitler could only see them. Theyre brown as a two-week Florida tan. And they don't goose-step, they gander-step—and do the suzi-que).

Reverting to the first paragraph, Shea and Raymond are the tops and knockout of Benny's show, or anybody's show. They are knockabout and subtle at the same time, also they have developed a few new tricks. Never miss the lads if you want a whole-hearted laugh, especially if you happen to be fed up on night-club dancers. They'll add angles that will help to while away many a weary late session at the so-called "hot spots."

Addendum.

The Earle this week presents about the smartest cartoon short offered for a long time. It's a take-off on movie stars in their lighter hours. Go around and try to recognize your favorites. (Hepburn fans will be annerred terrifically.)

Metropolitan

"ONE WAY PASSAGE." Warner Brothers re-issue of their picturization of a story by Robert Lloyd, with screen play by Wilson Mizer and Joseph Jackson; starring William Powell and Kay Francis, supported by Aline MacMahon, Frank McHugh, Warren Hymer, Frederick Burton, Herbert Mundin and Douglas Gerrard. Directed by Tay Garnett. Reviewed Friday afternoon by W. A. Whitney.

Of all the films attempting to delve into the metaphysical, none has attained that degree of etherealism of substance as the picturization of Sutton Vane's "Outward Bound." While "One Way Passage" is not the abtrusely reflective drama that that still earlier work was, it may, nevertheless, be reasonably catalogued as a mundane edition of that play.

With a purely physical story, situations of the earth earthy, "One Way Passage" is fabricated with an ephemeral touch which, while not appreciably affecting the material aspects of the picture, adds a compelling power to the narrative which raises an ordinary motion picture to rank of work of art.

Briefly the story is that of a passage from Kongkong to San Francisco. On board the liner is an escaped murderer being taken back to San Quentin for execution and a society girl with but a mopth to live. They meet, and each without letting the other know the true status, proceed really to live and enjoy life quite unselfishly.

In these parts are William Powell and Kay Francis, in characterizations which were made to their exact measurements, and, although actually enacted four years ago, performed in such a manner as to stand close to the top in both their catalogues of performances.

Stars Are Outstanding.

Mr Powell, the suave and polished gentleman, and Miss Francis, the appealing, lovely, but fascinatingly detached woman, in their performances here in a drama which moves somewhat slowly yet relentlessly to a preordained end, give "One Way Passage" a spiritual quality which is further augmented by the excellence of Tay Garnett's direction and the camera work of an anonymous cameraman.

"One Way Passage" is not what can be termed mass entertainment. Rather is it a picture to be seen by those of the so-called cognoscenti who appreciate something out of the ordinary, and like to ponder over a thought-provoking story, and to enjoy fine acting admirably presented.

Supplementing the feature are "Song Hits on Parade," with Freddie Rich and his orchestra, with Jerry Cooper and Benay Venuta leading the procession of popular tunes; "Porky the Wrestler," a Looney-Tune burlesque of the rassle business; "Poets of the Organ," with Mr. and Mrs. Jesse Crawford, assisted by Robert Simmons, in a cycle of modern pieces, and the combined releases of the Paramount and Universal News reels, which are unusually and newsily entertaining.

"AFTER THE THIN MAN." Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer picturization of a story by Dashiel Hammett, adapted to the screen by Frances Goodrich and Albert Hacket, co-starring William Powell and Myrna Loy, with James Stewart, Elissa Landi, Joseph Callela, Jessie Ralph, Sam. Levene and Dorothy McNulty. Directed by W. S. Van Dyke. Reviewed Friday afternoon (repeat engagement) by Sally Stroud.

They do say as how "After the Thin Man" is something in the nature of a carbon of the original piece about the Thin Man. Since there are the same stars, the same director and the same writer in attendance there is some reason to suppose there might be some similarity in mood.

So far as the audience is concerned, this mood is one which they appreciate thoroughly. Nick and Nora and Asta and Mrs. Asta whirl around in a swingy alcoholic daze, solving murders with the finesse and suavity which earned so many converts for the original Powell-Loy-Hammett-Van Dyke screening.

Elissa Landi is a distraught fellow player who drags Nick into the detective business again, when he had sworn to foreswear it. It is her husband who is unfortunate, and his murder is followed by three others. The Hammett idea is to pin the crime on the person least suspected. It works. You have slight clew to the true identity of the murderer until about a split second before the denouement. Which is good writing in any man's language.

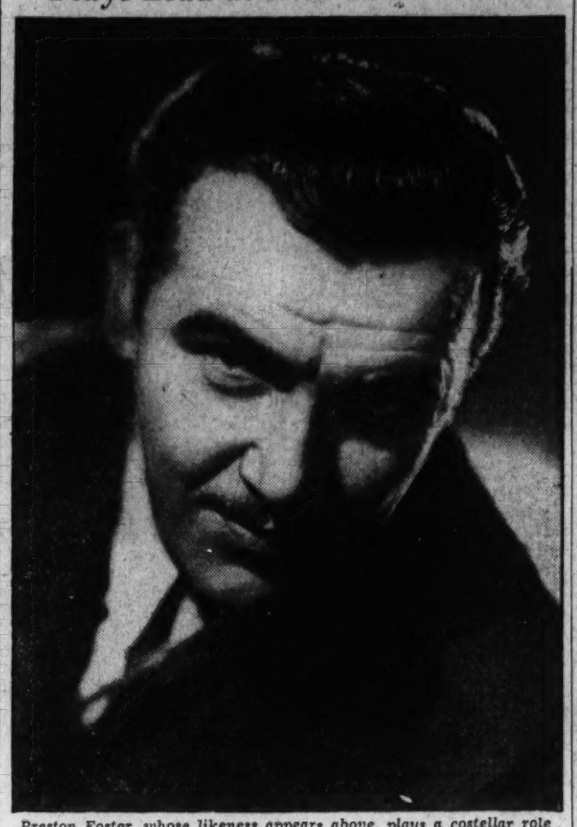
Plays Lead in Irish Players' Hit



Preston Foster, whose likeness appears above, plays a costellar role in "The Plough and the Stars," currently on view on the screen at RKO-Keith's. The opposite feminine part is assumed by Barbara Stanwyck. The Abbey Theater Players have presented this Sean O'Casey drama on the stage of the National Theater more than once and it is important that many of them appear in their original roles in the picture.

O'Casey's Play Is Pictured in Strong Fashion

'Plough and Stars' Keeps to Rugged Original on Screen at Keith's.

"THE PLOUGH AND THE STARS." RKO-Radio's picturization of the play by Sean O'Casey, adapted to the screen by Dudley Nichols, with Arthur Shields, of the Abbey Theater Players of Dublin as an associate producer, featuring Barbara Stanwyck, Preston Foster, Barry Fitzgerald, Denis O'Dea, Eileen Crowe, F. J. McCormick, Arthur Shields, Una O'Connor, Moroni Olsen, J. M. Kerrigan, Bonita Granville, Erin O'Brien Moore, Brandon Hurst and Wesley Barry. Directed by John Ford. Reviewed Friday night at RKO-Keith's Theater.

That grim, tragic and yet comically relieved study of the Irish rebellion of 1916, "The Plough and the Stars," by Sean O'Casey, has been converted into a motion picture entertainment that loses little, if any, of the flavor of the original work, first disclosed to Washington audiences by the Abbey Theater Players from Dublin on the stage of the National Theater.

It is customary to approach the celluloid version of so taut a play as this with something of fear and trepidation. There need be no such qualms in the present instance. A few liberties, to be sure, have been taken with the original Sean O'Casey script, but they are only such as are necessary to give the play the more expansive sweep that the cinema is able to afford beyond the reaches of a restricted stage.

Mrs. Foster Steps Out.

The central characters still are Nora and Jack Clitheroe, she a devoted wife and he a doting husband, drafted into the futile strife that kills off hundreds, with no apparent gain to anyone. These roles are played by Barbara Stanwyck and Preston Foster. Miss Stanwyck, after having given a splendid performance in "Banjo on My Knee," leaves me slightly cold in this one, but Mr. Foster is finely gaited to the character that he is assigned to play.

The picture has the inestimable advantage of the presence in the cast of a considerable number of the Dublin Abbey Theater Players in the roles which they created. It would be difficult, indeed, to conceive of any player ever surpassing the matchless comedy character work of Barry Fitzgerald, cast in the part of Fluther, of Eileen Crowe, who asumes the role of Bessie Burgess. They were stars of the Irish Players when they were here last and they are still stars in their same parts in the film.

Entire Cast Is Capable.

But all of the credit cannot be bestowed on the members of the cast already named. There are many more who contribute admirably to the rounded perfection of this study in civil turmoil. J. M. Kerrigan, a former Abbey Theater Player, does excellently in a part that is not as impressive as his own proved talents and Una O'Connor and Moroni Olsen also are niched in advantageous spots.

The story is a fiery and belligerent one, with a great surplusage of gunfire, but it possesses the virtue of a profound sincerity, a decided romantic interest and the climacteric appeal of vigorous action.

Distinguished Audience.

Last night's premiere was celebrated as the first public showing of the picture in this country and was attended by a long list of notables, among them Marvin H. McIntyre, of the President's secretariat; Michael MacWhite, Irish Free State Minister, and Mrs. MacWhite; Secretary Robert Brennan, of the Legation, and Mrs. Brennan; Secertary of War Harry H. Woodring and Mrs. Woodring; the Secretary of Commerce and Mrs. Roper and a considerable representation of both Houses of Congress. There also were represented the Friendly Sons of St. Patrick and the Ancient Order of Hibernians.

A new issue of "The March of Time," dealing efficiently, as usual, with two interesting subjects—the elevation of the working woman in New York's marts of trade and the Chiang Kai-shek crisis in China—a short-reel subject bearing the title of "The Ice Men," a new release of the "Screen Snapshots," showing informal activities of a great number of Hollywood stars. A cartoon comedy, "The Merry Cafe" and the latest Pathe News augment a bill that is featured by an unusually faithful and impressive transcription of a realistic and moving drama.

"CAMILLE." Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer picturization of the story by Alexandre Dumas, starring Greta Garbo, supported by Robert Taylor, Lionel Barrymore, Henry Daniell, Laura Hope Crews, Elizabeth Allen, Jessie Ralph, Russell Hardie, Zeffie Tilbury, May Beatty, Mahlon Hamilton, Dorothy Granger, E. E. Clive and King Baggott. Directed by George Cukor. Reviewed (return engagement) by T. Johnson Williams.

Rising to dramatic heights rarely achieved earlier in her long and distinguished career before the cameras of Hollywood, Greta Garbo, in the principal role in this version of Alexandre Dumas' "La Dame aux Camillias," takes her place with the other actresses who have found their best histrionic and emotional outlet in "Camille."

Of Miss Garbo's work as Marguerite, or of that of Robert Taylor as Armand, little need be added to that comprehensive appraisal which appeared in these columns on December 26. "Camille" is, it was stated at that time, "another demonstration of the consummate ability of the screen's greatest actress and a promise of the fine things that may be expected of Robert Taylor as his art matures. . . . I recommend this bill unequivocally . . ."

"Dare Devil'try," a film account of breath-taking feats; "Swing Bandi'try," a tabloid musical with Georgie Stoll and his orchestra, and a release of News of the Day complete the program.

U. S. Must Pay Interest On Bonds, Court Holds

Charlotte, N. C., Jan. 15 (AP).—The Fourth Circuit Court of Appeals held, in a decision today, that the Government cannot avoid payment of interest on Government clause bonds by calling the bonds for redemption, under a call which offers payment in currency based on the devalued dollar.

In the case, brought by Arthur W. Machen against the United States, the Circuit Court of Appeals reversed the judgment in favor of the Government rendered by Judge W. C. Coleman, of the District Court at Baltimore, Md.

Bred to Run

By Walter Haight

CHAPTER TWENTY-THREE.

Great Humiliation.

This was the day of my great humiliation, at least, that is the way I always think of it. Of course, I can look back on the occasion now and chuckle to myself, but on the day that I was led to the paddock with a white blaze painted on my face and the white ring blotted off my leg, I was a very apprehensive race horse.

I was experienced enough to know that there was some severe penalty for running a horse as a "ringer."

A "ringer" is another horse being substituted for the one whose name is in the entries. What worried me was what happened to the horse if he was discovered as an imposter.

During that walk from my stall to the paddock everything from being sold to a milkman to being shot passed through my mind. As we neared the paddock gate, I came to a conclusion. I would use the defense that had served me well up to this point of my career. I would try as hard as I could to win. I would not have to put up with this sort of thing long if I made myself a desirable "claim." If I was claimed under the name of another horse, my new owner probably would discover that something was wrong the first time he had me sponged down.

There was to be the supreme test of the painting job as I went into the paddock. I had to be identified by Abner Johnson, the colored clocker. Johnson "clocked horses" for 20 years. He was on the staff of a racing paper. It was his job to watch the workouts of the horses in the morning and record the time made. Almost anybody can push down the lever and start a watch, press it down and stop it and then get the time. However, the big job of being a good clocker is to identify the horses you have timed. Most clockers know the stable-boys or handlers and the names of the trainers and owners they work for. Generally, by questioning, they determine the name of the horse.

Of course, Johnson had to resort to this method at times, especially with horses shipped in from far off tracks or those starting for the first time. But it is said that Johnson had a "sixth sense" as far as identifying horses was concerned. He had developed this faculty. It reached the point where Johnson had to but see a horse, put a picture of the markings in his mental file, along wih the name, and from that time on he would know him. It did not matter whether Johnson was looking through his binoculars at a horse banking the far turn and watching one being led back to a stall, he knew the horse.

He drifted into the job of identifying horses as they entered the paddock. He was pleased because it gave him an "official" feeling. He took his work seriously but it did not go to his head. So quietly did he work that few of the track customers knew that Johnson was the "key man" in the paddock.

The fact that Tiny Tiddle, the gelding, was unable to see through my disguise, gave me a feeling that even Johnson might be fooled. He was fooled. When I walked passed him, he looked me over and said mechanically, "Stomach Pump, No 4." I was backed into the stall.

Stranger No. 3 did not parade me around the paddock nor did he take the blanket off me. He just stood in the stall beside me. The usual paddock crowd was there. Programs in hand, the customers stared at the horses. Clusters of horsemen, clubhouse patrons and the like were gathered in front of several stalls, but no one seemed interested in Flat Tire posing at Stomach Pump—what a name—I must get rid of it as soon as possible.

Presently, the jockeys filed in. And who do you suppose stepped up to my stall? None other than Jockey Allison, the rider who pulled me the second time I went to the post. Why didn't I step on that guy when I threw him off that time? A painted horse with Allison to ride me. That WAS something.

Of course, I could gain a sort of revenge by "dogging it," as the horsemen say, and not trying to win. But I stuck to my determination to win and have it over with. Allison and Stranger No 3 said nothing of consequence before the saddle bell rang.

We were soon on the track. Words cannot express how ashamed I felt. I had seen the other horses pass in review before my stall. What a sorry looking lot. The only horse in the race that had a good record was parading in front of me and he was so sore that he could hardly walk.

As we walked up the stretch, I felt that every pair of eyes in the thousands were focused on me. Flat Tire racing with this group of cast-offs. It was sickening. Just before we were even with the odds board, I looked up. Beside my No. 4 was the number 25! Yes, I was 25 to 1—there was no mistaking the odds—25 to 1, and so help me, I should have been 1 to 25. From what I learned later, Stomach Pump, had he been doing his own running, would have been 100 to 1.

Even the weather seemed to be frowning along with me. The sun went behind a blueish black cloud. The parade turned and headed for the 6-furlong chute, our starting point. Several of the jockeys broke their horses out of line for a limbering workout, but Allison kept me lapped on the outside of the No. 3 horse.

We were at the post probably five minutes. The black cloud had moved over until it blotted out three-fourths of the sky. Streaks of lightning flashed. It reminded me of the night Miss Doby told her story of the approaching auction back on the Ridgeway farm. Several of the horses bolted through and went into the air each time the lightning came or the thunder rumbled.

I will not say I wasn't frightened, but somehow I stood still. My determination to win and get out of this painting stable offset my fear.

The starting bell came. I fairly flew out of the gate. There were horses in that field who honestly believed they could win. I felt sorry for them. Allison pumped away on my back and I just galloped. Leaving the backstretch, I judged we must be four lengths ahead of the nearest horse—and I had hardly been running! There was a swishing sound—like rain. It was rain, I could feel it hitting my eyes and nose. What if it was raining—wasn't I a superior mudder?

On we went, Allison never really letting me have my head. On to the wire, far out in front. As we crossed the line the silence of the crowd—there must have been 10,000 people there—stunned me. A few scattered shrieks were all I heard.

The rain had set in in earnest as I trotted back to the judges' stand. I met several of the horses who had finished far back and they sent cutting looks at me.

Perhaps the rain would wash off some of the paint and somebody would recognize me. What then?

It wasn't Stranger No. 3 who threw a blanket on me. It was a road on the rain-soaked Washington-Baltimore boulevard at 2 a. m., Foster was rushed to the hospital, where examination revealed a fractured skull and internal injuries.

His automobile was discovered behind a sign board through which it had crashed, and police theorized that Foster, the master of the "hit-and-run" play in his baseball days, had, ironically, been struck down by a hit-run driver as he dazedly walked toward shelter.

Foster was 50 years old last month. For several years he has conducted a metal-welding business on Wisconsin avenue northwest.

With Foster when he died were, besides his mother, his wife and his eldest daughter, the officials of the Washington Club, President Clark Griffith, Secretary Edward B. Eyon and Trainer Mike Martin, who had made daily trips to the stricken man's bedside.

Named by Griffith two years ago as the all-time Washington third baseman, Foster was diminutive as ball players go, but famed equally for his fighting spirit, his ability "hit 'em where they ain't" and his clever fielding.

As a place-hitter he was rated by Griffith as second to the immortal Willie Keeler, and Walter Johnson publicly attributed much of his own success to Foster's fielding. When Johnson's speed encouraged rival teams to bunt, Foster developed as one of the cleverest fielders of bunts in the history of the league, his one-hand scoops and throws to first base in the same motion setting the style for that kind of play.

Foster joined the Washington Club in the fall of 1911 after being purchased from Rochester of the International League. He made his debut with the Nats the following spring in the same year in which Clark Griffith assumed the management of the Washington team.

Scarcely 5 feet 8 inches tall and weighing only 155 pounds, Foster had made a glowing reputation at Rochester after being released by the New York Yankees in 1909 when he attempted to enter the big leagues as a shortstop. Converted into a third baseman, he immediately blossomed as a star.

Foster was traded to the Boston Red Sox by Washington at the start of the 1920 season, and finished his major league career in 1922 after playing two years in the infield for the St. Louis Browns.

Griffith, Shocked, Pays Tribute to Foster

Clark Griffith, owner of the Washington Club, and Edward B. Eynon, jr., secretary-treasurer, last night expressed themselves as deeply shocked at the death of Eddie Foster, former third baseman of the Nats.

"Eddie was my particular pride as a third baseman," said Griffith. "He was unquestionably one of the greatest of his time and his personality endeared him to all whom he met. On the field his fighting spirit never exceeded the bounds of propriety and there never was a keener student of the game.

"Players of his type were a shining credit both to the fair name of baseball and the science of the sport."

Got Three Offers.

Disclosure that Harlow had been offered the athletic post by his alma mater was made at the December football coaches' meeting in New York.

It was understood that he had received three offers from Penn. The first two were that he was to leave his Harvard position immediately to take the physical education job. When Harlow refused these, it was learned that Penn State was willing to leave the position open until January, 1938, thus allowing him to complete the 1937 football season at Harvard.

The Penn offer was a life-time proposition, the United Press further learned.

Wants to Pull Harvard Up.

Those close to Harlow believed that his final decision was based on his conviction that he could pull Harvard football from the depths to which it tumbled five years ago and restore it to its former prominence.

Though Harvard was unable to win a major game in the two years Harlow has been at the helm, his 1936 team made an amazing comeback during the second half of the season, tying Princeton, losing to Navy by one touchdown and missing a deadlock with Yale only through failure to convert a point after touchdown.

Vines Subdues Perry in 4 Sets

By the Associated Press.

Pittsburgh, Jan. 15.—Ellsworth Vines, national professional tennis champion, handed Fred Perry, former czar of the amateur courts, his first defeat as a professional tonight. The game scores were 6—3, 5—7, 6—4, 6—1.

Vines' victory came after he had thrice been defeated by the pipe-smoking Britisher, and after Vines left a hospital in Chicago yesterday, ending a several-day period of recuperation.

Budge, Parker Go To Dixie Semifinal

Tampa, Fla., Jan. 15 (AP).—Donald Budge, of Oakland, Calif., the Nation's No. 1 ranked amateur tennis player, and Frankie Parker, of Lawrenceville, N. J., and Milwaukee, ranked just below him, advanced to the semifinals of the annual Dixie tennis tournament today.

Parker will meet Bryan M. (Bitsy) Grant, the Atlanta giant killer who holds the No. 3 ranking nationally, in the semifinals tomorrow. Budge will play Charles Harris, of West Palm Beach, Fla. Grant and Harris won their quarter-finals matches yesterday.

Budge rallied after a poor start and blasted Elwood Cooke, of Los Angeles, from the court, 8—6, 6—1. Parker defeated Walter Senior, of San Francisco, 6—1, 6—3.

Giants Sign 2 Players.

Unbeaten Duke Boxers Face Cards Tonight

C. U. Underdog In Highlight Of Week

Blue Devil Squad Boasts 2 National Champs, One Conference Titlist.

By Lewis F. Atchison.

Undefeated in two years of dual competition and recognized as one of the Southland's prize packages of collegiate pugilism, Duke University's potent ring team comes to blows with Catholic University's representatives tonight in the outstanding athletic event of a slim program. The first bout is scheduled for 8:30 o'clock.

Not only is this meet the week's best offering, but one of the most attractive matches scheduled in Washington this winter. The Blue Devils are touted as potential Southern Conference champions, and rightly so, for their number includes a conference titleholder and two N. C. A. A. champions.

Two National Champs.

Capt. Jack Kneipp, king of the conference lightweights; Danny Farrar, 145 pounds, and Jack Matulwicz, light-heavyweight, both national nitercollegiate champions, are the team's three top punchers. Kneipp is a local boy, whose only defeat in dual competition was administered by Ivan Nedomatsky, of Maryland, two years ago. Matulwicz was a member of the last Olympic team, and Farrar probably would have gone along with Uncle Sam's forces had he not broken his hand in the final bout in the trials at Chicago.

With a potent array of talen supporting these three, the Blue Devils will enter the ring 7-5 favorites over their hosts. The odds seem justifiable, especially in view of the fact that Fred Rogers, the Cardinals' ace light-heavyweight, will be unable to appear because of an attack of influenza. Rogers, fighting under the name of Rydzewski, defeated Matulewicz last year at Durham.

Martinez Meets Kneipp.

Duke's lineup will have Bob Koger leading off in the 115-pound division. His opponent will be Dave Bernstein, Catholic's flashy little bantamweight. Jimmy Little, or Bobby Price will hold forth in the 125-pound class, meeting Tex Guinan. Price defeated the Cardinal battler last year when they met at 115-pounds.

Kneipp gets Nestor Martinez, a hard-punching southpaw whom coach Eddie LaFond thinks may be the surprise of the match. Martinez lost to Penland, of North Carolina State last week in his first varsity fight, but has shown marked improvement in training. He will be the underdog against the more experienced Duke fisticuffer, but he will give a good account of himself.

Fred Mix, of Catholic, will be

3 Women Golfers Tied at Augusta

Augusta, Ga., Jan. 15 (AP).—Playing in the rain, three of America's kingpin women golfers tied for low honors today in the first 18 holes of the Augusta Country Club's 54-hole medal play titleholders tournament.

Patty Berg, Minneapolis lass, put together two 40's for the first 80 and her feat was followed up quickly by Jane Cothran, Greenville, S. C., who was out in 42 and came home in 38; and Helen Hicks, Woodmere, Long Island, out in 39 and in in 41.

Babe Didrickson, Beaumont, Texas, athlete, found the going tough from the start, taking 43 for the first nine and blowing herself to a 47 coming in, for a score of 90.

Behind Miss Kirby, Kathryn Hemphill, of Columbia, S.C., was in third place with Helen Dettweiler, Washington, and Isabell Ogilvie, Augusta, with 86's. Miss Dettweiller had a pair of 43's.

This Morning . . .

With Shirley Povich.

The chief regret of the late Nathan Hale was, as I remember it, that he had but one life to give to his country. Not quite as famous but far more startling is the complaint of Syd Cohen, the rookie left-hander who next spring will be getting his third trial with the Nats.

POVICH.

Cohen's chief regret is, plainly:

That there aren't more Lou Gehrigs in the American League.

If there were, then Cohen would not be a slavey in the bull pen but the toast of Washington fandom, the pitching sensation of the era and really hot stuff, as we say in our set.

Gehrig last fall applied for the Tarzan role in the movies and it may not be too far-fetched to assume that he considered himself well cast for the job as the result of his encounters with Cohen. Because the Washington rookie did, indeed, make a monkey out of Gehrig.

Other batters, run-of-the-mine hitters, could knock Cohen's offerings outa the lot and otherwise annoy him considerably, but over Gehrig he cast a magic spell. If Gehrig ever made a hit off Cohen, then Washington baseball writers do not recall it.

Seven times Gehrig faced Cohen in relief roles during the past two seasons and five times the rookie struck out the laddie known as Lou. Gehrig simply was unable to locate the ball as it was served up to the plate by the crooked-arm left-hander, took his futile swings and then stared incredibly at the guy who couldn't even earn a regular job on the Washington staff.

Cohen, a reformed first baseman who took to pitching because he was that kind of a first baseman, is still very much on trial with the Nats despite the hex he holds over Gehrig. He will report to Manager Bucky Harris at Orlando on March 1 as just one of the guys who might be retained by the club.

It is toward the younger talent that Bucky Harris is looking for added pitching strength. Dick Lanahan, the local boy who hasn't made good yet, will be given a roommate other than Buck Newsom and may make the grade. Lanahan, a rugged individualist in the midst of training rules, would have been retained by Harris last spring had he pitched himself into condition.

There's a young fellow named Kendall Chase who is the pet pitching protege of Clark Griffith for the simple reason that Chase throws the fastest ball of any pitcher on the Washington club. Griffith envisions Chase as a sensation if his wildness can be curbed. With Chattanooga last season, Chase was worked too infrequently to develop control, according to the Nats' owner.

A 6-foot 3-inch giant named Frank Petticolas was given the sack by Clark Griffith when contracts were mailed out last week, but a strenuous protest lodged by Manager Bucky Harris has won Petticolas a new trial. Thus, at Orlando, Griffith and Harris will be watching the development of Chase and Petticolas with great personal interest.

The capabilities of all but two of the veteran pitchers with the Nats are rather well established. But Ed Linke and Monte Weaver are stirring anew the hope held by Harris that one or the other, preferably both, will blossom into a regular. Linke's habit of coming up with strange maladies have blighted his chances for two seasons and Weaver's pitching success depends directly on his weight.

4 District Titlists Chosen to Get Instruction From Weissmuller

Four District title-holders have been selected by The Washington Post to receive public lessons by Johnny Weissmuller when the great swimmer appears before the public in the Shoreham Hotel pool pool Monday afternoon.

The aquatic star who won 39 national championships and five Olympic titles before becoming the Tarzan of screen fame, is making a personal appearance at Loew's Capitol Theater this week with his wife, Cinemactress Lupe Velez.

Following the public lesson, which is scheduled to start at 4:30 p. m., Weissmuller will dive in for an exhibition of the faultless form which won him such renown.

And Bono and Rita Augustrefer are the women stars selected to receive public instruction from Weissmuller. Miss Bono holds the 50-yard free-style indoor championship and the 50 and 100 yard free-style championships outdoors in the District.

Miss Augusterfer is 100 and 220-yard indoor champion, and captured the 220-yard outdoor title last year. Both Miss Bono and Miss Augusterfer fall just short of being great swimmers and it is Weissmuller's hope that by ironing out a few wrinkles in the form, they may move up to the very top.

Ernie Boggs and Karl Schmitt will be the men stars upon whom Johnny will bestow advice. Boggs is captain of the Y. M. C. A. team, which holds the indoor and outdoor championship of the District. Boggs holds the 220-yard free style and 150-yard back stroke indoor titles and is 3½-mile champion outdoors.

Schmitt formerly swan with the George Washington team and now is a member of the Y. M. C. A. team. He holds the indoor 50-yard championship and has bettered his own tme by 1 second so far this year, indicating that he has far from reached his greatest development.

Capt. Ed Murphy and Fred Lemly, of Western High School, also will be among hose participating in the lessons.

Because of great interest in the exhibition being shown by embryonic stars The Post has set aside a special block of tickets for swimming coaches of the various local high schools and prep schools. Coaches interested in having their teams attend the exhibition are requested to obtain tickets for their pupils at The Post Sports Deparment.

Tickets for the general public are available in the Sports Department of The Washington Post between the hours of 5 p. m. and midnight. There is no charge for the tickets, but limited spectator capacity at the pool makes it necessary to curtail attendance.

Old Line Teams In Twin Bill Tonight

Maryland's first double-header of the season will be played tonight at College Park, where the Terrapin courtmen entertain Duke, and the ringmen encounter the University of Richmond, starting at 8 o'clock.

Boasting an impressive record of nine victories in ten games, including six consecutive conference wins, Duke is a slight favorite to dispose of its host in basketball. The Blue Devils' lone defeat thus far was suffered at Mississippi State's hands earlier in the week.

On the other hand, the experienced Maryland team is a top-heavy favorite to blast Richmond's novice mittmen into defeat. Richmond, in fact, has elected to forfeit the 145-pound and light-heavyweight bouts because of the paucity of material in these classes, pinning its hopes of victory on the remaining six bouts.

Duke Has Young Team.

In basketball Coach Eddie Cameron, of Duke, has a young but fast and spirited team under his wing, one that promises to go far in conference competition. The regular team which will take the floor tonight has Joe Riley and Fred Edwards at forwards; Bud Herrick, center; Ken Podger and Herb Cheek, guards. Sparkie Bergman, Ed Swindell, Bob O'Mara and Johnny Hoffman will be available for reserve duty.

Maryland's starting line-up, while not definite, probably will find George Knepley and Waverly Wheeler at forward; Bill Guckeyson, center; "Little Knockey" Thomas and Charley Keller, guards.

To give the fans a full card, two boxing bouts have been added in the 125-pound and 155-pound divisions, but will be exhibitions and will not count in the point score. Bob Bradley, hard-hitting rookie, has been selected as Maryland's second 125-pounder. His opponent will be selected from among Joe Flax, Ed Hughes and Johnny Ridenour.

Track Aces Run In Meet Tonight

New York, Jan. 15 (AP).—Tuning up for the major tests to come, leading performers on the boards, headed by Glenn Cunningham and Gene Venzke, compete in the Sixty-ninth Regiment track and field games tomorrow night.

Cunningham and Venzke, rivals of long-standing at the mile and 1,500 meters, will race in separate handicap 1,000-yard runs. Each will run from scratch, while a third 1,000-yard handicap will find Lou Burns, of Manhattan, as the scratch man.

Cunningham whipped Venzeke by 6 meters in their first clash this season, an 800-meter duel in the Columbus Council, Knights of Columbus, games in Brooklyn last week.

By John R. Vosburgh.

The odd spectacle of a Roosevelt High team beating a Central team was enacted for the benefit of some 2,500 spectators at Tech High yesterday where the Rough Riders threw the inter-high basketball race into a first-class muddle by upsetting the Dark Blue tossers, 24-22.

Roosevelt's uphill fight to victory, in which it overcame a 12-4 lead, followed a 40-to-12 victory of Eastern's inter-high champions over Woodrow Wilson High. The net results of the afternoon left Tech High the lone unbeaten team in the series with Eastern in second place and Central, Roosevelt and Western tied for third.

Slow to get started, the Rough Riders had big, burly Ray Fridrick, the former Ohio schoolboy star, who was high scorer with 11 points, to thank for keeping them in the ball game in the first half. And they had their cagy captain, Frank Bailey, to thank for the sizzling finish which marked the Roosevelt triumph.

Bailey Helps Out.

It was Fridrich's foul shot which gave the Blue and Gold 20-19 lead with little more than two minutes to play but it was Bailey's calm 25-foot set shot with only a minute to go which lengthened the Roosevelt lead to 22-19.

And it was Bailey's foul shot with 45 seconds to play which made it 23-19. Irving Fogel increased it to 24-19 with about half a minute to go after being fouled by Charlie Clark but Bailey's three points had served to give his team the lead it needed to stave off the fighting Central squad.

Central's captain, little Billy Vermillion, let go a long shot from the center of the floor which plunked through the hoop without touching the rim but the game ended before another play could be held.

Central Away Fast.

Flushed by its 28-17 victory over Eastern last week, Central got off to a fast start and with Clark and Vermillion leading the way shot to a 10-4 lead in the first quarter. Sam Fox made it 12-4 and then Fridrich, 190-pound six-footer, went to work. The grim-looking husky sank seven points in a row and it was 13-11 at the half.

With the start of the second half he emerged from a hot scrimmage beneath the basket where he is at his best and plumped another double-decker through the mesh. Inspired, perhaps, by the Ohio boy's showing, his team mates began getting in the ball game and despite a neat floor game by the busy Fox, kept pace with Central to send the game into the final period at 17-17.

Vermillion, who had been out of the game for several minutes on account of three personals on him, went back into action but Roosevelt immediately shot to a 19-17 lead when Bailey let one fly a good half-mile from the basket and it swished miraculously through the hoop.

Wilson Outclassed.

The Eastern standards were yelling thunderously for a Roosevelt victory, incidentally. Despite a basket by Vermillion that tied the count at 19-19, the Rough Riders proceeded to draw away. Felix Silverstein fouled Fridrich and the Buckeye State boy sank the free shot to give Roosevelt the lead it clung to as grimly as a G-man to the trail of a kidnaper.

Both teams indulged in some overanxious guarding and 40 foul

Revolta Tied With Picard For Third

Both Card 66s; Perelli Is 2d With 65; Cooper Has 69; Little 71.

By the Associated Press.

Oakland, Calif., Jan. 15.—Ralph Guldahl, lanky Chicago pro, outscored par, the elements and 200 opponents today to see the first-round pace in the $5,000 Oakland Open Golf Tournament with a 64.

His remarkable round, made despite driving rain, sodden fairways and mushy greens, clipped four strokes off the par 34, 34—68 Claremont course. The record is 62, held by Dewey Longworth, Claremont pro.

Out in 31 and home in 33, Guldahl, winner of the last Augusta and Miami tournaments, took a one-stroke lead over young Johnny Perelli, Tahoe, Calif., who shot 35, 30—65.

Revolta, Picard Tied.

Paul Runyan, of White Plains, N. Y., turned in a 67, while Harry Cooper, of Chicago, winner of the recent Los Angeles open and the favorite here, tied at 69, with Charley Congdon, youthful Tacoma, Wash., entry. Cooper 3-putted two greens on the first nine

Tom Lo Presti, Sacramento, Calif., came in late with a par 68 to join the select few equaling or bettering standard figures. None of the rest of the starting field of 215 played par golf.

Long-legged Horton Smith, of Chicago, ranked with Cooper and Guldahl as the "big three" of pre-tournament favoritism, put together a 34-36—70. Others in the same bracket included Sam Parks, jr., of Pittsburgh, 1935 National Open champion, and long-hitting Jimmy Thompson, of Shawnee, Pa.

Little Cards 71.

Other golfing notables found the short but exacting layout an unusually severe test, especially with the added hazard of wind-whipping rain.

Lawson Little, who passed up defense of his British and American amateur titles last year to play for pay, toured the course in 71.

Denny Shute, P. G. A. champion and former British Open title holder, slipped to a 74.

Guldahl's round included one-putt greens on the first seven holes. He three-putted the twelfth. His card:

Hampton Shades Howard Five, 40-37

Before a capacity crowd, Howard University last night went down in defeat before the champion Hampton Institute five, 40-37, after racing them off their feet in the first half of a fast game.

Bill Brown scored eight of these first-half points, and Herbie Jones negotiated six, while "Larry" Owens, the Hampton ace, was able to account for but four points. The fact that Owens ended the game with 17 points to his credit indicates the story in a nutshell.

Duke Is Favorite Over C. U. Boxers

Ferrar's partner in the 145-pound duel, and the latter is expected to win handily. Ferrar knocked out Mix in the first round of their bout last year and has ideas of a similar finish tonight.

Ed Dunne, raw and rugged rookie, will supplant Rogers in the line-up but is a distinct underdog against the flashy Southerner.

Duke will be well represented in the 155 and 165-pound classes by the fighting Mann brothers, Wilton and Al, a couple of tough hombres. Both are kayo artists, packing explosive rights that speak authoritatively. Al won the conference 155-pound championship two years ago, but was defeated in his quest for the 165-pound crown last year by Max Novich, of North Carolina.

Don Schmitt, who got up off the floor in his fight with Frank Polatti, of South Carolina, to win the decision last week, is Duke's entry in the heavyweight class. He will meet Leo Katalinas, Catholic's ponderous puncher who kayoed the Duke boy in the first round last winter.

5-3 Victory for Duke.

Unless Catholic scores a couple of upsets indications point to a 5-3 victory for the visitors. La Fond had hoped for at least a draw, but counted on having Rogers available, and the loss of that one man probably will turn the tide of battle.

Probable Cardinal victors are Bernstein, Bunsa, 165-pounder, and Katalinas—none of whom, of course, are certain to win. All of the other boys, however, will go into action in the unfamiliar role of long shots, for their respective opponents appear to have too much experience and native ability for them to cope with.

Irving, Moreno Listed to Fight Monday

Monday night's fistic card at Turner's Arena was completed last night when Matchmaker Goldie Ahearn signed Henry Irving, of Washington, to tangle with Wild Man Moreno, of Baltimore, in a six-round preliminary as the start of a long-contemplated comeback by Irving. Scheduled to fight here three weeks ago, he was forced to cancel because of a hand injury.

In Moreno he will meet a tough preliminary battler. The Baltimorean has rolled up a knockout record in the Maryland city.

Lined up in the small event will be Utah's Jackie Burke, hardest hitting welterweight of the Rocky Mountain section, and Lew Raymond, who soundly whipped Phil Furr in Baltimore recently. The Raymond tangle will be Burke's Eastern debut.

In the other ten-rounder, Lloyd Pine, Akron, Ohio, featherweight, will square off with Joe Temes, of Tampa.

Temes has been fighting professionally more than ten years, and, in more than 240 fights has never been knocked out.

His opponent dropped a ten-round decision to Champion Petey Sarron in Akron last summer that was so unpopular police had to be called to quell a near-riot among the fans.

In the main preliminary, Bobby Wilson, local boy, will tangle with the Richmond slugger, Joe Spangler in a six-rounder.

Because Chester Ruby, Baltimore flyweight, injured a hand while training yesterday, Mel De Shong, also of Baltimore, will battle Buddy Grimes, of Richmond, in the other six-round bout.

This is the third of a series of instructive swimming articles by Johnny Weissmuller, one of the most famous of all aquatic stars. Weissmuller, who later became the famed Tarzan of the screen, is now appearing in person on the stage at the Loew's Capitol.

By Johnny Weissmuller.

The arm stroke is said to be the most difficult part of the American crawl—but it is easily perfected if properly studied.

The old-fashioned "progress" method from the "dog paddle" on up to the trudgeon strokes have been omitted from these lessons as they are confusing and often ruin form for the crawl stroke.

The easiest method of learning the arm positions is to practice in front of a mirror by the aid of the above illustrations. Bend at the waist and stand far enough away from the glass to observe the body from waist to hips. With a chalked string draw a line down the center of the glass. Through all the movements keep this line directly between eyes and heels, to serve as the straight line that a swimmer must always maintain for perfect balance.

I would advise against extending the hand to full reach for the downward stroke too soon. When the arm is fully extended above the head it causes the shoulder to drop, throwing the balance off.

Note also that the hand has started to turn in toward the chest, and that the elbow is above the hand.

The right-hand stroke comes downward and backward, sweeping the hand across the chest until the forearm reaches a 45-degree angle. With the downward stroke half completed, the body starts rolling toward the right and the pulling hand comes toward the stomach for the final and most powerful thrust. This is executed rapidly, the hand cutting out from the stomach and past the hips for the completion of the stroke, and is the most driving part of the entire stroke.

Relaxation of the forearm and wrists on the return for entry is of utmost importance. Allow the strong shoulder muscles to fling the arm back to the entry position, training forearm and wrist just above the water, as in figure at left. Note that arm is stiff only from shoulder to elbow. From elbow to fingers it is relaxed. The shoulder is throwing it back to a position opposite the mouth where it starts downward again. The straight line between eyes and heels is still maintained.

Always keep eyes straight ahead in practice of the arm stroke as pictured. The roll of the head for breathing comes in a later lesson.

To avoid confusion in study of pictures and instructions, start slowly at first, and perfect a continuous rotation of both arms in front of the mirror. Allow no interval between one revolution and the next stroke. Keep eyes on the mirror center line and do not let either hand on the downward pull cross the line of the other.

In tomorrow's lesson we will discuss the fine points of racing.

Georgetown U. Builds A Rink for Ice Hockey

The erection of an outdoor ice-hockey rink at Georgetown, completed recently, automatically assures Washington of one of its mildest winters in recent years.

Built on the tennis courts, the rink covers the playing surface of three courts, including alley space between each, and is large enough for regulation hockey matches. At this writing it consists of a sand floor or base and boarded sidewall approximately 3 feet high.

Western Downs St. John's Five By 29 to 24

Western High's seasoned basketball team added one more impressive victory to its record yesterday in its own gym by scoring a 5-point win over the strong St. John's Prep School team, which has been the stumbling block for public high school teams this year. The score was 29-24.

Western got off to an early lead, and was stepping along at a fast clip when the Johnnies rallied in the second period to catch the Georgetowners at 14-all, just as the half ended. Sharp shooting by Jim Geibel and Jack Reges aided the St. John's cause after Western had built up a 6-0 lead.

Going into the third period, Western tallied two field goals, Paul Heil and George DeWitt on the scoring end of a fast passing attack, to take an 18-14 advantage, and after the Saints had tied the score at 20, went on to a final lead which was never relinquished.

The St. John's team was greatly handicapped early in the first period when its high-scoring forward, Johnny Swagart, was forced from the game with a sprained ankle.

Ladies' Duckpin Stakes Draws Leaders

Event to Start at Noon at Columbia; Manor Club Continues Pace.

The Nation's leading women, representing practically every duckpin center along the Eastern seaboard, will make their bid for the Southern individual championship and a $100 cash prize today in the sixth annual renewal of the Ladies' Dixie Sweepstakes.

The classic consists of nine games with total pinfall deciding the winner. The first block is scheduled at 12 o'clock noon at the Columbia Alleys.

The second block will be rolled at the Lucky Strike alleys starting at 3:30 p. m., and the final block at Rosslyn at 7:30 p. m.

The problem of stopping the fast-stepping Manor Club team confronts the Golf Club League. Last night at Lucky Strike they swamped Beaver Dam No. 1 three games. Top individual honors for the night went to Doc Marvin Parks, whose 387 set helped in the runner-up Kenwood No. 2 team's two wins over Manor No. 2. Despite Secretary Charlie Young's big game of 150 and 373 set, Argyle took the measure of Beaver Dam No. 2 for two games.

Special Dispatch to The Post.

Scranton, Pa., Jan. 15.—Catholic University's flying basketball Cardinals ran into a 31-26 defeat here tonight in the first of their annual home-and-home battles with St. Thomas College's smooth-working quintet.

The Washington, D. C., outfit got away to a 4-0 lead, but 8 minutes from the end when the Tommies spurted and moved into a 31-22 advantage. Brown then sank a pair of double-deckers to pull the invaders up to within five markers of the home club.

Gallaudet, American U. To Renew Feud Tonight

Gallaudet and American University will renew their ripe old rivalry tonight at Kendall Green, with the Eagles favored to finish on the long end of the score. With the exception of the Duke-Maryland game at College Park it is the lone game scheduled here tonight.

Joe Burnett, Racy Drake and Al Hoffmeister, veteran trio, will carry the brunt of the Blues' attack, while American will bank on Sid Zink and Walter Edwards for the bulk of its points.

Catholic University meets La Salle at Philadelphia tonight, in the second game of a week-end trip.

Boys Club Wins.

The Boys Club of Washington swamped Federal Alcohol, 34-17, last night on the Boys Club court. In a club league game in the 130-pound class, the Boys Club Fleetwings took a 15-10 decision from the Bethesda A. C.

Selections at Hialeah Park.

Dear Al: I still wonder what Genie Palatine was doing that day at Charles Town when she was beaten a city block. Now that the Denemark Stable has her, we are seeing her real form. Irving Anderson, the clever apprentice, lost his "bug" yesterday. He is a full-fledged jockey now and will not get the 5-pound allowance any more. He was the leading rider at Tropical Park with 25 winners in 26 days. He rides at 104 pounds. Jockey W. G. Jackson is threatened with appendicitis and has been advised to refrain from riding for a while. E. E. Van Ree has purchased the horses Pauldron, Wha Hee and The Runner from William Ziegler, the New York sportsman, for a sum reported to be $13,500. Hialeah has promised to run races on a half hour schedule regardless of the mutuel play. Officials say that the parades will not be lengthened to aid the betting. They will have to show me. Wait until today's Saturday program. Bert Mitchell, trainer for the Denemark Stable, is leading the horse conditioners at this meeting. His horses are in top form and he may win the $500 prize for the first third of the session here. I understand that Clocker Mike has volunteered for service in the Spanish revolution. I hope he's on the losing side. BILL.

C. U.'s Gridmen Play St. Louis U. in '36

Negotiations for a football game between Catholic University and St. Louis University were completed last night, The Post has learned, with the Cardinals scheduled to meet the Billikens in St. Louis next October 23.

"Dutch" Bergman, Catholic U. coach, could not be reached for a statement, but it was authoritatively learned that the schools had agreed to a home-and-home series. The game replaces one previously scheduled with DePaul at Chicago. The latter school is known to have requested a shift in its date with the Cardinals, preferring to meet them October 30, but Catholic evidently could not make the change in its schedule.

The District eleven has eight games definitely booked and one hanging fire with Duquesne. Word from Pittsburgh is expected some time next week concerning this last game, and if it is not forthcoming it probably means that the Dukes will decline to play.

St. Louis is coached by C. E. Muellerleile, an alumnus, who also serves in the capacity of athletic director. Last year was one of the most successful, from a football standpoint, in its recent history, although it virtually was an all-sophomore team The school has a stadium with a seating capacity of 20,000 persons. With no major grid game scheduled in that vicinity the date of the C. U. game, school officials confidently expect a sell-out.

brand new stranger. I heard a chorus of "aws" on me as I was being led down the stretch. I looked at the results board. There was my mutuel price—$67.30. Imagine, $67.30 on a 1-to-25 shot!

I looked around at the crowd by the rail. Through the rain I saw a face that seemed to consist only of a set of teeth—with the stump of a chewed cigar at one end. I might have known HE was around.

"Hey, there, wait a minute, fellow," came an excited voice behind me.

The man who was leading me stopped. I turned to look. It was Abner Johnson. Several important-looking men were running along with him, as best they could on the now slippery track.

"Look at that will you?" cried Johnson. "THAT HORSE HAS A WHITE RING ON HIS FORELEG. That horse is NOT Stomach Pump. That's not water dripping off there—that's paint."

I felt like crawling through the track. And I had thought that I had broken Abner Johnson's record—the only record I ever threatened.

"Who is this horse? You dirty thief. Tell me, who is he?" demanded the man, whom I learned later was a detective.

"I don't know," replied the frightened stranger. "All I know is that some man told me he would give me five bucks if I would take him over to 'gyp row' after the race and cool him out."

They took the stranger one way and me another.

Fencing and Eli Yale Fail Florida's Favorite Players

By the Associated Press.

Hialeah Park, Fla., Jan. 15.—L. F. Anderson's Noel H., recent driving winner of a mile race when entered for a claiming price of $3,000 at Tropical Park, sprang one of numerous upsets here today when he easily won the first half of the Lakeland purse, a 6-furlong test for 3-year-olds that was split and run in two divisions.

With Irving Anderson aboard, the ebony-hued gelding scored by four lengths in 1:11 flat. He paid $20.60 for $2.

Conservative, in the silks of W. W. Adams, son of C. F. Adams, head of the Suffolk Downs track, landed second money by a length and a half over J. E. Widener's Fencing.

Owaller, the second choice, flattered her backers to the stretch. The Denemark filly managed to get clear of Conservative in the first furlong. She continued smoothly enough until Noel H., sent through on the inside, challenged as they turned for home.

Owaller wilted fast as Noel H. dashed into a long advantage. Conservative was no match for the surprise horse through the final furlong. Fencing was kept within range of the early pace in fourth place but could only squeeze into the picture with his dying bid.

Favorite players received another stunning blow in the second division of the Lakeland purse. Still hoping for their first winner of the afternoon, they backed Mrs. Payne Whitney's Eli Yale. This colt, regarded highly enough by his stable to be campaigned against the best juveniles the past season, had worked brilliantly for his first start since an easy victory in Maryland last fall. He took a comfortable lead, only to weaken in the stretch and finish sixth.

The purse went to Prairie Dog, a $23-for-$2 shot that added to Mrs. Emil Denemark's list of feature successes. The colt wore down Eli Yale and held J. C. Clark's Anglo Saxon safe to register by a half length. H. W. Jackson's Clamorous came from well back to finish third, another half length behind. The time was 1:11 1-5.

J. E. Widener's Conniption, one of the ten juveniles in today's 3-furlong opening event, ran off with the purse, scoring by four lengths under Wayne Wright. The daughter of Stimulus made her task much easier by coming over from the outside right after the break and piling up the field. She then opened up a long lead and won with ridiculous ease to pay her backers $12.30 for $2.

Johnnie Dear, one of the victims of the crowding, was a game closing second, a half length before Our Ketcham. Singing Slave, the only one that had started before, had a rough trip and wound up just out of the money in the role of favorite.

All Media Talk Markets, But When Markets Talk Media, It's Time to Listen!

AN "odd lot" buyer makes a stock market operator... "A" buys ten shares of General Motors and "B" buys ten thousand shares of New York Central... but the difference in Capital makes no difference in the Conversation.

They are both "in the market"... even though only one is "in the money"

That's the trouble with terminologies ... the superficial and the substantial use the same "tags".

All media talk markets, but it is still true that the size of a market is governed by the size of the medium you use.

The Metropolitan Sunday Newspaper Group, not only circulates where the world's richest markets are, but reflects in the size of its circulation the teeming characteristics of those markets themselves.

Any group can tell you that the Twenty-State area of the Northeastern section of the United States contains 60% of the country's population and is responsible for 67% of its retail sales ... but by that very token, it follows, that only INTENSE COVERAGE can convert these statistical riches into business for you.

The 6,500,000 to 8,000,000* circulation of the Metropolitan is greater than the circulation of any single medium or any group of mediums the world has ever known... and the three lines below sum up the story and the formula of its sales evangelism:

If you want your product to be "in the money"
Instead of merely theoretically "in the market"
Place it in the GROUP numerically "in the know"

Washington Business 5% Above Normal

Capital's Trade Index a Year Ago Was 11% Below Average.

Washington was one of a group of 38 American cities in which business improved 7 per cent or more in December over November, according to the monthly survey of 147 trading areas of the United States conducted by the research division of Brooke, Smith & French, Inc., of Detroit and New York.

Business in Washington at the end of December stood at 5 per cent above normal, representing a gain of 7 per cent over November. At the close of December, 1935, the city's business index stood at 11 per cent below normal.

December was a month of impressive gains in many parts of the country. As a result the national business index rose 4 percentage points and now stands at only 2 points below normal business conditions.

"More trading areas improved their business standing during December than in any other month of the year," the report states. "Improvement took place in 125 out of the 147 business centers with gains ranging from 1 per cent to 12 per cent over November. Fourteen areas showed small declines and 8 remained without change.

"Fifty-one areas are normal or above; 51 range from only 1 per cent to 10 per cent below normal; 41 are between 11 and 20 per cent below. Only 3 range from 21 to 30 per cent below normal."

Tel. & Tel. Net $9.36 a Share For Last Year

Exceeds $9 Dividend for First Time in Six Years.

By the Associated Press.

New York, Jan. 15.—Net earnings of American Telephone & Telegraph Co. available for dividends in 1936 were equal to $9.36 a share. 36 cents more than the annual dividend, the company's preliminary report, made public today, disclosed.

It was the first time since 1931 that net earnings were equal to dividend requirements. In the intervening four years the full dividend of $9 each year was paid from earnings and surplus.

Net profit on a parent company basis for the period, with period, with figures for the final three months partly estimated, totaled $174,715,000, or $9.36 a share. This compares with $125,806,504.78, or $6.74 a share in 1935.

For the final quarter net profit was $60,136,000, equal to $3.22 a share, against $35,053,026.32, or $1.88 a share in the like period last year. A note points out that due to "an unusual concentration of dividend revenues in the three months ended December 31, 1936, the earnings for this period are not indicative of the annual rate of earnings of the company."

The consolidated report of the Bell System, which includes American Telephone and 23 associated companies, for the 12 months ended November 30, shows net earnings of $178,195,433, or $9.54 a share of the parent company stock. Not all of which was available for dividends. This compares with $127,495,010, or $6.83 a share, in the like period of 1935.

President Walter S. Gifford in his report said that the system had a net gain of 880,000 telephones in 1936, compared with 461,000 in 1935.

Stock Prices Swing Upward With Labor Peace in Sight

By Frederick Gardner.
Associated Press Financial Writer.

New York, Jan. 15.—With the General Motors strike situation taking a turn for the better, selected stocks swung upward in today's market. Automobiles, steel, rubbers and assorted specialties responded to announcement of a truce with the unions by advancing fractions to around 3 points, some to new recovery peaks.

The buying movement was exceptionally speedy at times, but offerings were sufficient to stem the tide at frequent intervals. In the final hour extreme gains had been reduced in numerous instances. Last minute support, however, lifted favorites to about their best levels.

The rails were given a brief but fast push. Most, though, finished under their top marks. They were aided by the somewhat better expected freight loadings last week which were more than 18 per cent ahead of the previous period.

Coppers, oils and several other groups were reluctant to follow the push, and there were many minus signs in evidence at the close. Most utilities, farm implements and retail stores were backward.

The day's turnover amounted to 2,897,230 shares compared with 3,260,410 yesterday. The Associated Press average of 60 issues moved up .2 of a point to 72.1 after remaining unchanged for the preceding two sessions.

Wall Street Hopeful.

Although it was realized the main points of the automotive conflict have yet to be threshed out, Wall Street was hopeful next week's conferences will result in peace.

Steels and rubbers, beneficiaries of motor production, were well out in front during early dealings.

Coppers failed to respond to the general boost of the domestic metal to 13 cents a pound, a new high since 1930. It was noted the export price was still under its record post-depression mark and abandonment of foreign output restrictions tended to cool buying ardor for shares in this category.

Oils were diffident as seasonal easing of gasoline charges appeared, along with continuance of large stocks, higher production and refusal of large producers to meet the recent hoist in crude.

Prominent shares on the upward jaunt included General Motors at 68½, Chrysler 122¾, U. S. Steel 81⅞, Bethlehem 76¾, General Electric 59½, U. S. Rubber 50⅛, Goodyear 30⅜, Rubber 23⅜, Santa Fe 75, Baltimore & Ohio 23, Northern Pacific 29¾, U. S. Industrial Alcohol 29, Spiegel, Inc. 24⅞, Paramount 26⅜, Douglas Aircraft 75, Mohawk Carpet, 38⅜, Anchor Cap 24, Armour 8¾, Baldwin 10⅛, and Remington Rand 25¾.

American Telephone dropped ¾ at 182½ notwithstanding the company's 1936 statement showing the $9 dividend fully earned for the first time in four years.

Other losers were American Can 115¾, Anaconda 55½, Kennecott 61, Cerro de Pasco 69¼, Radio 12, J. I. Case 156⅛, International Harvester 105¾, Texas Corporation 53⅞, Crown Cork 89¾, and Amerada 105.

Commodities were mixed. Wheat at Chicago was down ¼ to 1¼ cents a bushel and corn was ½ to ⅛ lower. Cotton was up 15 cents a bale to off 25 cents.

Prices stiffened all along the line in the bond market today, although outstanding gains were scarce. A better demand for high-grade corporate issues sent a number higher and marked the reversal of a downward trend in progress all week. Improved sentiment for low yields and Government obligations was regarded in some quarters as indicating a belief reserve requirements of member banks will not be materially altered. Much of the unsettlement in these loans has been attributed to uncertainty over the Reserve Board's ultimate decision in the matter.

United States Government liens advanced in unison, with gains ranging from 2-32 to ⅜ of a point. Treasury 3¼s of 1964 ran up the latter fraction to close at 106.5.

Domestic bonds were fairly even, although most active issues appeared a little higher on the day. Rails and utilities made some progress on the upside, while a few industrials wavered a bit. Erie 5s gained 1 at 88¼, St. Paul 5s of 1975 added ½ at 34¾ and Missouri Pacific 5s "F" edged up ⅜ at 46⅞. Alleghany 5s, North Western 4¾ and Soo Line 6s worked a bit lower.

American & Foreign Power 5s moved ahead a point to 85½, and International Telephone 5s improved fractionally. Abitibi 5s were reactionary, losing 1⅞ to 96½.

Of the industrials, Walworth 4s lost a major fraction and loans of such sugar companies as Vertientes, Camaguay and East Cuba sold off 1 to 2 points. Goodyear 5s and Bethlehem Steel 4¼s also declined. The Associated Press averages for ten industrials dipped .1 of a point to 103.9.

Other Associated Press averages, except for the ten low-yields which improved a bit, finished even.

Foreign bonds were unimpressive with prices holding near previous closing levels. South Americans lacked direction and ended the day fractionally uneven. Turnover totaled $15,923,000, face value, for all bonds compared with $15,785,000 Thursday.

Tool Orders Reach Peak for 18 Years

New York, Jan. 15 (AP).—Machine tool orders in December reached the highest index figure for any one month since 1919, the index of the National Machine Tool Builders' Association showed today.

It stood at 257 compared with 234 in January, 1920, the previous record volume month. The highest index figure reached in 1929 was 185, and that for November, 1936, was 147.1.

Wheat Prices Decline With Sales Pressure

By the Associated Press.

Chicago, Jan. 15.—Lower prices for wheat became the rule late today, with selling pressure directed especially against the May delivery. A reversal of trend in the Liverpool wheat market, where the close was 1 cent to 1½ net lower after showing in some cases ⅜ advance, did much to turn Chicago values downward.

At the close, wheat here was ¼-1¼ cents under yesterday's finish, May, 132¾-⅞; July, 115¼-⅜; September, 111⅛-¼. Corn, ½-1⅛ down; May new, 111⅛-¼; July new, 106⅝-¾; September, 102⅝-½. Oats, ¼-¾ off; May, 53⅞-54, and rye showing 1½-2 cents setback; May, 110⅝. Provisions results were unchanged to 37 cents lower.

Wheat Is Steady In Narrow Range

New York, Jan. 15 (AP).—Reactions in cotton today from opening advances were partly recovered in late trading. March sold off from 12.45 to 12.38 and closed at 12.44. Final prices generally were 3 points net higher to 5 lower.

Final prices were 9 to 12 points net lower with sales of 295 contracts. Bleachable spot, nominal: January closed 11.61; March, 11.44; May, 11.54; July, 11.61.

6-Million Gain Shown by U. S. In Stabilization

Morgenthau Reveals Big Profit in Management of Gold Fund.

The much-discussed "profit" from Treasury operation of the $2,000,000,000 stabilization fund was disclosed by Secretary Henry Morgenthau, jr., yesterday to have been about $6,000,000, on June 30, 1936, according to reports emanating from the Senate Banking Committee.

Morgenthau went before the Senate Banking Committee and the House Committee on Coinage, Weights and Measures in support of Administration legislation to extend both the President's power to revalue the dollar and the stabilization fund.

Over Republican opposition, the Senate Banking Committee voted to extend both functions. The bill embracing the two extensions will be reported to the Senate today, and will come up for action in the chamber Monday.

Morgenthau is understood to have explained the $6,000,000 "profit" from $200,000,000 of the $2,000,000,000 fund which has been used as a "net" profit. It was said to have been realized largely from sale and repurchase of gold and silver, and from interest on security holdings.

The Treasury is said to have told the House and Senate Committees the recent tri-partite monetary stability agreement between the United States, Great Britain and France, later extended to Belgium, the Netherlands, and Switzerland, has been a powerful help in maintaining recovery impetus, and holds out a prospect of real international currency stabilization in the future.

Failure to continue the stabilization fund and the gold revaluation fund would "strip us of the power to meet our competitors in world foreign exchange markets," and probably would end in dissolution of the stabilization agreements, Morgenthau was represented as saying.

Although some opposition to continuance of the stabilization fund was said to have arisen at yesterday's Senate Banking Committee meeting, the major controversy on the Senate floor is expected to center on continuance of the President's power to revalue the dollar beyond January 31. In the end, both proposals are expected to be approved overwhelmingly.

Some of those who might be counted on to oppose continuance of the President's gold authority are said to feel that the power having been granted, and exercised, no great amount of good could be expected from its sudden withdrawal.

Wild Life Refuge To Be Established Near Beltsville

Establishment of a 2,200-acre wild life refuge, created out of part of the historic old Snowden Manor at Beltsville, Md., was announced yesterday by the Department of Agriculture.

Known as the Patuxent Research Refuge, the tract of land will be stocked with wild life of all description, including turkeys, grouse, beaver and deer.

Under the direction of Dr. L. C. Morley, superintendent of the Biological Survey of the Patuxent Research Refuge, a study will be made of the habits of the animals with a view toward restoring certain types of wild life now becoming extinct.

Morgan Considers Liquor Post Offer

New York, Jan. 15 (AP).—W. Forbes Morgan, treasurer of the Democratic National Committee, said today he was considering a proposal to become supervisor of the liquor industry as head of the Distilled Spirits Institute, Inc., self-regulatory body set up by the industry.

Morgan said he was attracted by the opportunity for public service that the offer involved. He said he would continue his work with the Democratic committee, for which he receives $15,000 a year, even if he accepted the liquor trade offer.

Morgan stated he had had the matter under consideration for some time. A retired investment banker, he formerly served as secretary of the Democratic committee and as deputy governor of the Farm Credit Board.

Mississippian to Hang For Killing Colored Men

Jackson, Miss., Jan. 15 (U.P.).—William Clark Mitchell, 55-year-old bespectacled war veteran, was adjudge sane tonight and on February 11 will become the second white man since reconstruction days to be hanged in the South for a colored man's homicide.

Gov. Hugh White, who stayed Mitchell's execution, originally set for January 11, for the sanity test, announced the conclusion that he is sane.

Mitchell was sentenced by a white jury in Yalobusha County for making human torches of Louis and Coot Bryant, colored, after he had drenched their bodies with kerosene.

Influenza on Increase; 12,145 Cases Reported

By the Associated Press.

The Public Health Service kept a close watch yesterday on influenza cases over the country, but said the situation was not "alarming."

Cases reported for the week ended January 9 totaled 12,145, compared with 3,993 the previous week. Officials said, however, their statistics were incomplete.

Farm Income Over '35 Total Increases 17%

Higher Prices on Cotton, Wheat Lead Upswing, U. S. Experts Say.

By the Associated Press.

Federal farm experts yesterday announced that as a whole the Nation's farmers showed financial gains in 1936.

Net income of farmers after deducting $4,230,000,000 for wages, interest, taxes, rent, supplies and other production costs, was placed at $5,300,000,000.

The experts said this was 17 per cent larger than in 1935, and only 7 per cent less than the comparable 1929 income of $5,669,000,000.

They said the severe drought had damaged the corn and wheat belt incomes, but cotton was a bright spot in the tabulations, with both a larger crop and higher prices. The "white gold" netted growers $955,000,000, compared with $737,000,000 in 1935.

Even the wheat crop, with a short spring wheat yield, showed a gain. The farm value was estimated at $624,000,000, more than $100,000,000 above the 1935 crop.

Cully A. Cobb, director of the Federal Form Program in the South, said yesterday the soil conservation plans for that region this year differed only slightly from 1936.

"The few changes are in line with the thinking of farmers as expressed in community, county and State meetings throughout the South," Cobb said in a radio speech.

The director said expenses of the county AAA committees would be deducted in each county from payments to farmers made this year, instead of a lump deduction from the total amount allotted to the Southern region.

New U. S. Destroyer Placed in Commission

Portsmouth, Va., Jan. 15 (AP).—The navy yard here contributed another destroyer to the United States Navy's fleet today when the U. S. S. Downes, one of seven similar vessels now under construction at the yard, was put on the active list of naval ships.

Brief impressive ceremonies marked the commissioning exercises aboard the Downes, a vessel of 1,500 tons standard displacement, with a length of 334 feet, beam 35 feet and a mean draft of 10 feet and 10 inches.

Runciman Plans Call on Roosevelt

Sir Walter Runciman, member of the British Cabinet in charge of trade affairs, will be a White House caller late this month, it was revealed yesterday. Immediately there was speculation that the visit probably would have an important bearing on the suggested British-American reciprocal trade agreement.

President Roosevelt, at his press conference, made known the anticipated visit of the distinguished Briton in denying a story that he was planning to call a British-French-American economic conference. The President said Sir Walter had planned for some months to come to America on a holiday, and that while here he would call on the President as a personal friend. The Briton is expected here January 28.

It was while Prime Minister McKenzie-King of Canada was here on a vacation trip that he and Mr. Roosevelt had a talk that led to the present Canadian-American reciprocal trade pact.

LaGuardia 'Not Invited' To Inaugural Ceremony

New York, Jan. 15 (AP).—New York's Republican Fusion mayor, who campaigned for the re-election of President Roosevelt, let it be known today he had not been invited to the Inauguration.

During a board of estimate meeting Mayor F. H. LaGuardia suggested January 20 for a committee meeting.

"Aren't you going to the Inauguration?" asked a member.

"I haven't been invited," said the mayor.

Lewis Asks Neutrality With Unrestricted Trade

Chicago, Jan. 15 (AP).—Senator James Hamilton Lewis, of Illinois, Democratic whip of the Senate, advocated for the United States today a new policy of neutrality, with no restrictions on foreign trade "justified by righteousness."

"Let not the United States be caught again in the trap sprung upon her international trade by competing nations of Europe," he said in an address prepared for delivery before the Chicago Bar Association.

Weather Like Year Ago; Then Came the Blizzard

Special Dispatch to The Post.

Hagerstown, Jan. 15.—Tulips have pushed through the surface of the ground and crocuses are in blossom, all because of the unusually warm weather of the last ten days, but J. A. Miller, veteran weather observer at Keedysville, warned the Cumberland valley not to feel too certain that the winter is over.

Miller, who has checked the weather daily for the Weather Bureau for 35 years and who is also crop reporter for the United States Department of Agriculture, says that this section was experiencing just such a winter last year—that is until January 23. On that night, a 40-mile wind brought zero weather and for five days the mercury did not get above the zero mark.

Record Trade Year Expected By Tire Firm

Looking forward to a record year, national and divisional officials of Goodyear Tire & Rubber Co. met yesterday at the Hamilton Hotel to outline and discuss the company's advertising plans for the current year.

These plans, which have been in process of preparation for three months will provide for the largest newspaper advertising program in the history of the company and the largest general campaign since the depression.

Plans were outlined to district managers of the southeastern division of the company by R. S. Wilson, vice president of the company in charge of sales, and H. G. Harper, manager of advertising, who with other national executives came on from the company's home office at Akron, Ohio. District managers will, in turn, call similar meetings to explain the advertising program to their sales staffs.

Announcing that an upward surge of business was expected in 1937, Wilson said that the company expected to get its share of it and that the meeting had been called to assist its representatives in the local division to get theirs.

Besides Wilson and Harper, others in attendance at the conference were L. J. Bornhofen, Akron, assistant manager of advertising; C. C. Osmun, Akron, manager southeastern division; L. E. Judd, Akron, director of public relations; H. R. Rynerson, local sales manager, and the following district managers, C. A. Gray, Birmingham, Ala.; E. E. Pound, Cincinnati; P. E. Hanaver, Columbus, Ohio; H. F. McClure, Charlotte, N. C.; H. R. Burkle, Baltimore; E. M. McPherson, Atlanta; V. Y. Bell, Jacksonville, Fla., and L. C. Churchill, assistant district manager, Charlotte, N. C.

Jewish Oppression Is Called 'Destiny'

New Orleans, Jan. 15 (AP).—Jews were told today by Jacob W. Mack, of Cincinnati, that oppression is the destiny of "all who dare to think and speak and act independently."

Mack is chairman of the executive board of the Union of American Hebrew Congregations Council in session here.

He said Jews should not ask to be shielded from oppression because such treatment was "not a badge of shame, but a crown of glory."

Samuel B. Finkel, president of the National Federation of Temple Brotherhoods, declared: "We don't want any Father Coughlins in our rabbinate. If there is to be any fist-shaking, let it be in the cause of religion."

Sea Union Votes To Call Off Strike

New York, Jan. 15 (AP).—The New York local of the Marine Engineers Beneficial Association voted today to concur in the decision of national officers in Washington to call off their strike against East and Gulf Coast American ships.

E. P. Trainer, business manager of the M. E. B. A., said similar action would be taken by locals in Boston, Baltimore, Philadelphia, Norfolk, Galveston and New Orleans.

The meeting deferred action until Wednesday night on a proposal to withdraw from membership in the joint maritime strike committee, which is directing th strike on the East and Gulf coasts. Jack Lawrensen, secretary of the council, said last night the M. E. B. A. members, "have repudiated" their national offices in Washington.

Miss Stevens Gets WPA School Post

Miss Dorothea Stevens, a teacher at Peabody School, is the new director of nursery schools in Washington, it was announced yesterday at WPA headquarters. She succeeds Mrs. Lucille F. Ezekiel, who resigned last month.

A graduate of George Washington University and Boston Teachers College, Miss Stevens was head teacher of the S. J. Bowen and Peabody Nursery Schools. Miss Anne Spector, a Columbia University graduate, has been appointed to Miss Stevens' former position at Peabody.

Mrs. Ezekiel, wife of Mordecai Ezekiel, economic adviser to Secretary of Agriculture Henry Wallace, said, when she resigned, she left her position because WPA supervisors failed to co-operate with the nursery school project. As a result, she said, her work had been handicapped.

Catskill, N. Y., Jan. 15 (AP).—Manning (Manny) Strewl was headed back for Clinton Prison tonight after dramatically ending his retrial on charges of kidnaping John J. O'Connell, jr., with a plea of guilty of blackmail.

By pleading guilty today to the lesser charge, Strewl won a 15-year sentence from Supreme Court Justice Sydney F. Foster as a substitute for the 50-year term previously imposed for conviction of kidnaping in the 1933 abduction.
